THE GOLDEN TREASURY

PALGRAVE

LONGMANS' ENGLISH CLASSICS

Helen Ruth Davisson
English 12 B.
Session 2 13.

Loaning 2.60
221.

Famous Words.

229
245
261
265
269

Used during the term that starte

303
316
326
338.

Ethel Davisson
Room 213 Row 2 Seat 5

Longmans' English Classics

PALGRAVE'S

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

EDITED

WITH NOTES AND AN INTRODUCTION

BY

HERBERT BATES, A. B.

INSTRUCTOR IN ENGLISH IN MANUAL TRAINING HIGH SCHOOL
BROOKLYN, N. Y.

NEW YORK

LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.

LONDON, BOMBAY, AND CALCUTTA

COPYRIGHT, 1905
BY
LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.

All rights reserved

FIRST EDITION, January, 1906
REPRINTED, May, 1906
APRIL, 1909, JUNE, 1910
FEBRUARY, 1911
SEPTEMBER, 1911

PREFACE

In adapting this collection to the use of schools, many notes have been added, and a few of Palgrave's original notes have been abridged or excised. The notes added have been of two kinds. It has seemed desirable, in the first place, to call attention to the respects in which certain poems illustrate or depart from those characteristics of the age and the author noted in the introduction. It has been necessary, secondly, to give information concerning the facts on which a poem is founded, to explain words and allusions not readily looked up, and to warn the reader against certain very easy misconceptions of the meaning. Notes have been omitted when the information included in them has been given in an enlarged form, or when the material that they embody appears elsewhere in notes or Introduction. In the case of L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, and Gray's Elegy, since these works are used, in most schools, in editions liberally annotated, it has seemed best here to compress the notes to a minimum and, for detailed comment, to refer both teachers and students to such editions.

In the introduction to the whole, and more specifically in the introductory remarks that precede the notes upon each Book, the attempt has been made to point out not merely the peculiar beauty and value of each author's work by itself but, in addition, its significance as a part of the whole progress of human thought and art,—to show in brief, not only the meaning of each poem, but the meaning of the series as a whole.

The editor would acknowledge valuable assistance received from the admirable notes to the Golden Treasury by J. H. Fowler and W. Bell; from Rolfe's edition of Shakspere's Sonnets, and Professor Bronson's edition of Collins' Poems.

CONTENTS

Introduction	ix
The Golden Treasury	1
Notes	366
Index of First Lines	439
Index of Writers	449

INTRODUCTION

THE BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR

Among innumerable collections of English verse, Palgrave's Golden Treasury has come to be accepted as being, in its particular field, a standard, even a classic. Less inclusive than some, less systematically historical than others, it unites in itself so much of each of the varied merits of all other compilations as to surpass them all in rounded completeness. It expresses, as clearly as the gallery of paintings accumulated by some connoisseur, the personality of its maker. The secret of its greatness lies in the charm of this personality. Its compiler—one might almost say, its author,—had a literary taste that singularly combined catholicity and individuality. While the poems that he liked express his own nature as completely as could his voice or the expression of his face, yet, so thoroughly is his personality in accord with the general nature of mankind, that this collection, embodying primarily the taste of one, appeals equally and inevitably to the taste of all.

Francis Turner Palgrave (1824–1897) was fitted, both by education and by his later surroundings, to embody the general spirit of English literary appreciation. Coming from a home where the first place was given to literature and art, educated at Charterhouse and Oxford, where he associated with such men as Matthew Arnold and Arthur Hugh Clough, entering, later, into the closest friendship with Tennyson, he naturally absorbed into his originally sensitive and artistic temperament the culture of the past and the spirit of the present. We know his nature less by what he said than from what he loved. His original writings, excellent as they are, the world has neglected. It has preferred the man as it has found him reflected in this collection. Here we find his best, his devotion to beauty, his sensitive refinement, his peculiarly classic appreciation of stateliness and placidity even in emotion. We feel that he loved Wordsworth more comprehendingly than he did Shelley, and that the songs of the Elizabethans were nearer to his heart than the ballads of the Scottish moors. From reading his volume we come to know him as he was known to his friends, a man of the finest temperament, cultured by knowledge of the world's best, a man of gentle nature, of 'childlike transparency of character, appreciation, and quick human sympathy.'

The plan of the Golden Treasury, which included only authors no longer living at the time of its publication, was extended, in the Second Series (1897) to include authors of the nineteenth century. This continuation, while lacking the largeness of view of the earlier volume —the author was too near his subject to see it in true perspective—is nevertheless of great value to every lover of poetry. The Golden Treasury itself, originally published in 1861, was by 1891 very considerably revised and enlarged. Perhaps the greatest alteration was in the rearrangement of the poems in closer conformity to historical grouping.

It should be observed that, in each Book, the poems are grouped, as in the early edition, largely by subjects. It is in harmonious and tasteful grouping that we see one evidence of Palgrave's artistic instinct. The poems fall into groups, or, where there is no direct relation between the subjects, one feels an exquisite, though indefinable, fitness in the juxtaposition. It is often said that in a great poem one cannot change the place of a word without injury to the whole. In this collection one could hardly change the place of a poem without injury. The grouping, once done, seems inevitable, a thing discovered rather than determined upon, a thing as ultimately, as indisputably right, as the grouping of the petals of a flower or as the shaping of a sea-shell.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE STUDENT

The student in taking up each Book, should first of all familiarize himself with what is said with regard to it in the Introduction. He should then add to this whatever is said in the introductory comment that precedes the notes upon that particular Book. In reading the poems, he should consider not only the meaning and beauty of each, but should observe in what respects each conforms to or departs from the thought and manner typical of the age and of the author. To ascertain the exact date of an author's work, he should consult the Index of Writers at the end of the volume. A conscientious student will not only study carefully the notes given here, but will also look up in proper books of reference all words and allusions regarding which this book does not afford him satisfactory information.

It is desirable that, so far as time permits, the student extend the range of this compilation by the use of larger collections. Ward's English Poets is particularly recommended as giving, first, a larger number of writers, secondly, a larger and more varied selection from the work of each, and lastly, a full critical comment, by some prominent man of letters, upon the work and character of each. In the case of the most important writers, it will be best to turn directly to the poet's complete works, —not necessarily to read all that he has written, but to acquire a larger and deeper impression of the nature of his work as a whole. This book, so used, becomes a sort of index to literature, a collection of examples of what each poet has to offer, a first introduction to authors whose works may become companions through life.

With regard to important authors, it may be well to read a certain amount of biography, not so much to learn the details of the poet's life,—the things in which he was like other men, as to understand those circumstances of his life and those elements of his character that explain his work. Wordsworth's early enthusiasm for nature, Byron's unhappy boyhood, and Cowper's morbid religious terrors would be instances.

It is no less desirable to read thoughtfully at least one standard work on the general history of English literature, not a list of authors and what each individually accomplished, but a work that carries out in large what the Introduction of this volume attempts in little, —that indicates the larger groupings of writers and that traces in their works general tendencies of national, even of international thought and feeling. Literature shows something of what life meant in the age in which it was created, and it is most valuable for the student to perceive these different meanings, to compare them, and to consider which comes the nearer to one's own view of the meaning of the world in which one finds oneself.

For the elementary student, the general works on English literature of Dobson, Pancoast, Moody and Lovett, Simonds, Halleck, and others will give a clear view of the chief periods and a fairly definite idea of the relation of each author to his time. Taine's History of English Literature, while inclined to exaggerate, and peculiarly French in its attitude, brings out certain main features in a way that cannot be forgotten. A more advanced work of great value is W. J. Courthope's History of English Poetry. Volumes 2, 3, and 4, will particularly concern the student of this volume. Henry

Morley's English Writers, volumes 10 and 11, and E. Engel's History of English Literature will, in whole or in part, be of great help. For a peculiarly vivid imaginative presentation of the spirit of four great periods of the world's literary history, it is a question if anything can surpass the four little pictures in Walter Pater's Imaginary Portraits.

There are many books dealing with particular periods. There is a series edited by George Saintsbury, Periods of European Literature, containing volumes entitled The Later Renaissance, the Augustan Age, Mid-Eighteenth Century, Romantic Revolt, and Romantic Triumph. Another series, Handbooks of English Literature, edited by Professor Hales, contains The Age of Shakspere, and similar volumes dealing respectively with Milton, Dryden, Pope, Johnson, and Wordsworth. Works dealing especially with mediæval literature and the beginning of the Renaissance are too advanced for most young students. Saintsbury's Seventeenth Century Literature and Nineteenth Century Literature, and Edmund Gosse's Eighteenth Century Literature, deal very definitely with the individual authors of each period.

With regard to the great literary revolution in the latter part of the eighteenth century, one should consult H. A. Beers' History of English Romanticism in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries (2 vols.).

Works dealing with particular authors are too many to note. With regard to Shakspere's Sonnets, one may consult Wendell, Chapter viii; Dowden, Chapter viii; Brandes, Chapters v to viii, or Sidney Lee. The two last named afford the fullest treatment. There are besides, many essays, in various collections, dealing with various topics in literary history and criticism. Such, for example, will be found in Lowell's Among my Books, in Sir Leslie Stephen's Hours in a Library, in David Masson's collected essays, as well as in the prose writings of De Quincey, Hazlitt, Coleridge, and many modern essayists.

The very copious notes to the Golden Treasury by W. Bell and J. H. Fowler (Macmillan, 1904) can be heartily recommended to every student who wishes to make a more advanced study of these poems.

SUGGESTIONS TO THE TEACHER

It seems especially important that the student of poetry should be taught to love it, not to detest it. The study of detail, of words, allusions, etc.,—especially in the more learned poets, Milton, Gray, and Collins, should always be subordinated to the appreciation of the poet's feeling. Words should be looked up after the interest has been aroused, rather than before. Certain scholastic 'information' may well be ignored altogether.

Taste and judgment should be developed. An excellent exercise for educing the power to recognize the characteristics of certain writers is to place on the blackboard extracts from typical works not included in this volume and to call upon the pupils to identify the author and to give his reasons for thinking as he does. A pupil may suggest the wrong author, and yet show a very commendable judgment. Naming Collins for Gray, or Keats for Shelley might, in some instances, be almost as creditable as giving the right answer.

Many poems are worth memorizing. Within certain limits, one might allow the student a choice between a number of passages. The one chosen would be learned with more enthusiasm, and the need of the decision (if the passages are of equal length and difficulty) would call for comparison and judgment.

As exercises in composition formal "reports" on the author and his work are unsatisfactory, for they are likely to be merely condensed from—if not copied from—the handiest book of reference. It is better to assign subjects that call for the student's own views, either on the subject-matter of the poem, on its interest and attractiveness, or on the personality of the author. In some cases, as in Twa Corbies (136) or the Maid of Neidpath (240), the hint in the text might be used as a basis for an original narrative. In others, as in Thyrza (246), stanzas 5 and 6, or After Blenheim (260), there is opportunity for a difference of opinion and argument.

Research has, however, a value, and as an exercise in it, not in composition, it may be well to have the student report on an author, or preferably on a definite topic about him. Wordsworth's early life as an explanation of his enthusiasm for nature, Dryden's use of the heroic couplet, Byron's love of freedom as shown in his life,—would be examples of such topics.

As has been said elsewhere in this volume, the collection should be used not as a work complete in itself, but as a compendium of 'samples from literature,' an illustration of what poetry has to offer,—a basis for a life's reading.

THE

GOLDEN TREASURY

SELECTED FROM THE BEST SONGS AND LYRICAL POEMS IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, AND ARRANGED WITH NOTES

BY

FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE

LATE PROFESSOR OF POETRY IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

TO

ALFRED TENNYSON

POET LAUREATE

This book in its progress has recalled often to my memory a man with whose friendship we were once honoured, to whom no region of English Literature was unfamiliar, and who, whilst rich in all the noble gifts of Nature, was most eminently distinguished by the noblest and the rarest,—just judgment and high-hearted patriotism. It would have been hence a peculiar pleasure and pride to dedicate what I have endeavoured to make a true national Anthology of three centuries to Henry Hallam. But he is beyond the reach of any human tokens of love and reverence; and I desire therefore to place before it a name united with his by associations which, while Poetry retains her hold on the minds of Englishmen, are not likely to be forgotten.

Your encouragement, given while traversing the wild scenery of Treryn Dinas, led me to begin the work; and it has been completed under your advice and assistance. For the favour now asked I have thus a second reason: and to this I may add, the homage which is your right as Poet, and the gratitude due to a Friend, whose regard I rate at no common value.

Permit me then to inscribe to yourself a book which, I hope, may be found by many a lifelong fountain of innocent and exalted pleasure; a source of animation to friends when they meet; and able to sweeten solitude itself with best society,—with the companionship of the wise and the good, with the beauty which the eye cannot see, and the music only heard in silence. If this Collection proves a storehouse of delight to Labour and to Poverty,—if it teaches those indifferent to the Poets to love them, and those who love them to love them more, the aim and the desire entertained in framing it will be fully accomplished.

F. T. P.

May: 1861

PREFACE

This little Collection differs, it is believed, from others in the attempt made to include in it all the best original Lyrical pieces and Songs in our language (save a very few regretfully omitted on account of length), by writers not living,—and none beside the best. Many familiar verses will hence be met with; many also which should be familiar:—the Editor will regard as his fittest readers those who love Poetry so well, that he can offer them nothing not already known and valued.

The Editor is acquainted with no strict and exhaustive definition of Lyrical Poetry; but he has found the task of practical decision increase in clearness and in facility as he advanced with the work, whilst keeping in view a few simple principles. Lyrical has been here held essentially to imply that each Poem shall turn on some single thought, feeling, or situation. In accordance with this, narrative, descriptive, and didactic poems,—unless accompanied by rapidity of movement, brevity, and the colouring of human passion,—have been excluded. Humourous poetry, except in the very unfrequent instances where a truly poetical tone pervades the whole, with what is strictly personal, occasional, and religious, has been considered foreign to the idea of the book. Blank verse and the ten-syllable couplet, with all pieces markedly dramatic, have been rejected as alien from what is commonly understood by Song, and rarely conforming to Lyrical conditions in treatment. But it is not anticipated, nor is it possible, that all readers shall think the line accurately drawn. Some poems, as Gray's Elegy, the Allegro and Penseroso, Wordsworth's Ruth or Campbell's Lord Ullin, might be claimed with perhaps equal justice for a narrative or descriptive selection: whilst with reference especially to Ballads and Sonnets, the Editor can only state that he has taken his utmost pains to decide without caprice or partiality.

This also is all he can plead in regard to a point even more liable to question;—what degree of merit should give rank among the Best. That a poem shall be worthy of the writer's genius,—that it shall reach a perfection commensurate with its aim,—that we should require finish in proportion to brevity,—that passion, colour, and originality cannot atone for serious imperfections in clearness, unity or truth,—that a few good lines do not make a good poem,—that popular estimate is serviceable as a guidepost more than as a compass,—above all, that excellence should be looked for rather in the whole than in the parts,—such and other such canons have been always steadily regarded. He may however add that the pieces chosen, and a far larger number rejected, have been carefully and repeatedly considered; and that he has been aided throughout by two friends of independent and exercised judgment, besides the distinguished person addressed in the Dedication. It is hoped that by this procedure the volume has been freed from that one-sidedness which must beset individual decisions:—but for the final choice the Editor is alone responsible.

Chalmers' vast collection, with the whole works of all accessible poets not contained in it, and the best Anthologies of different periods, have been twice systematically read through: and it is hence improbable that any omissions which may be regretted are due to oversight. The poems are printed entire, except in a very few instances where a stanza or passage has been omitted. These omissions have been risked only when the piece could be thus brought to a closer lyrical unity: and, as essentially opposed to this unity, extracts, obviously such, are excluded. In regard to the text, the purpose of the book has appeared to justify the choice of the most poetical version, wherever more than one exists; and much labour has been given to present each poem, in disposition, spelling, and punctuation, to the greatest advantage.

In the arrangement, the most poetically-effective order has been attempted. The English mind has passed through phases of thought and cultivation so various and so opposed during these three centuries of Poetry, that a rapid passage between old and new, like rapid alteration of the eye's focus in looking at the landscape, will always be wearisome and hurtful to the sense of Beauty. The poems have been therefore distributed into Books corresponding, I to the ninety years closing about 1616, II thence to 1700, III to 1800, IV to the half century just ended. Or, looking at the Poets who more or less give each portion its distinctive character, they might be called the Books of Shakespeare, Milton, Gray, and Wordsworth. The volume, in this respect, so far as the limitations of its range allow, accurately reflects the natural growth and evolution of our Poetry. A rigidly chronological sequence, however, rather fits a collection aiming at instruction than at pleasure, and the wisdom which comes through pleasure:—within each book the pieces have therefore been arranged in gradations of feeling or subject. And it is hoped that the contents of this Anthology will thus be found to present a certain unity, 'as episodes,' in the noble language of Shelley, 'to that great Poem which all poets, like the co-operating thoughts of one great mind, have built up since the beginning of the world.'

As he closes his long survey, the Editor trusts he may add without egotism, that he has found the vague general verdict of popular Fame more just than those have thought, who, with too severe a criticism, would confine judgments on Poetry to 'the selected few of many generations.' Not many appear to have gained reputation without some gift or performance that, in due degree, deserved it: and if no verses by certain writers who show less strength than sweetness, or more thought than mastery of expression, are printed in this volume, it should not be imagined that they have been excluded without much hesitation and regret,—far less that they have been slighted. Throughout this vast and pathetic array of Singers now silent, few have been honoured with the name Poet, and have not possessed a skill in words, a sympathy with beauty, a tenderness of feeling, or seriousness in reflection, which render their works, although never perhaps attaining that loftier and finer excellence here required,—better worth reading than much of what fills the scanty hours that most men spare for self-improvement, or for pleasure in any of its more elevated and permanent forms. —And if this be true of even mediocre poetry, for how much more are we indebted to the best! Like the fabled fountain of the Azores, but with a more various power, the magic of this Art can confer on each period of life its appropriate blessing: on early years Experience, on maturity Calm, on age, Youthfulness. Poetry gives treasures 'more golden than gold,' leading us in higher and healthier ways than those of the world, and interpreting to us the lessons of Nature. But she speaks best for herself. Her true accents, if the plan has been executed with success, may be heard throughout the following pages:—wherever the Poets of England are honoured, wherever the dominant language of the world is spoken, it is hoped that they will find fit audience.

1861

Some poems, especially in Book I, have been added:—either on better acquaintance;—in deference to critical suggestions;—or unknown to the Editor when first gathering his harvest. For aid in these after-gleanings he is specially indebted to the excellent reprints of rare early verse given us by Dr. Hannah, Dr. Grosart, Mr. Arber, Mr. Bullen, and others,—and (in regard to the additions of 1883) to the advice of that distinguished Friend, by whom the final choice has been so largely guided. The text has also been carefully revised from authoritative sources. It has still seemed best, for many reasons, to retain the original limit by which the selection was confined to those then no longer living. But the editor hopes that, so far as in him lies, a complete and definitive collection of our best Lyrics, to the central year of this fast-closing century, is now offered.

1883–1890–1891

Εἰς τὸν λειμῶνα καθίσας, ἕδρεπεν ἕτερον ἐφ' ἑτέρῳ αἱρόμενος ἄγρευμ' ἀνθέων ἀδομένᾳ ψυχῇ——

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

BOOK FIRST

1

SPRING

Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant king;
Then blooms each thing, then maids dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds do sing,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!

The palm and may make country houses gay,
Lambs frisk and play, the shepherds pipe all day,
And we hear aye birds tune this merry lay,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo.

The fields breathe sweet, the daisies kiss our feet,
Young lovers meet, old wives a-sunning sit,
In every street these tunes our ears do greet,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo!
Spring! the sweet Spring!

T. Nash

2

THE FAIRY LIFE

i

Where the bee sucks, there suck I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I couch, when owls do cry:
On the bat's back I do fly
After summer merrily.
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough!

3

ii

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Courtsied when you have, and kiss'd
The wild waves whist,
Foot it featly here and there;
And, sweet Sprites, the burthen bear.
Hark, hark!
Bow-bow.
The watch-dogs bark:
Bow-wow.
Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer
Cry, Cock-a-diddle-dow!

W. Shakespeare

4

SUMMONS TO LOVE

Phoebus, arise!
And paint the sable skies
With azure, white, and red:
Rouse Memnon's mother from her Tithon's bed
That she may thy career with roses spread:
The nightingales thy coming each-where sing:
Make an eternal Spring!
Give life to this dark world which lieth dead;
Spread forth thy golden hair
In larger locks than thou wast wont before,
And emperor-like decore
With diadem of pearl thy temples fair:
Chase hence the ugly night
Which serves but to make dear thy glorious light.

—This is that happy morn,
That day, long-wishéd day
Of all my life so dark,
(If cruel stars have not my ruin sworn

And fates my hopes betray),
Which, purely white, deserves
An everlasting diamond should it mark.
This is the morn should bring unto this grove
My Love, to hear and recompense my love.
Fair King, who all preserves,
But show thy blushing beams,
And thou two sweeter eyes
Shalt see than those which by Penéus' streams
Did once thy heart surprize.
Now, Flora, deck thyself in fairest guise:
If that ye winds would hear
A voice surpassing far Amphion's lyre,
Your furious chiding stay;
Let Zephyr only breathe,
And with her tresses play.
—The winds all silent are,
And Phoebus in his chair
Ensaffroning sea and air
Makes vanish every star:
Night like a drunkard reels
Beyond the hills, to shun his flaming wheels:
The fields with flowers are deck'd in every hue,
The clouds with orient gold spangle their blue;
Here is the pleasant place—
And nothing wanting is, save She, alas!

W. Drummond of Hawthornden.

5

TIME AND LOVE

i

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced
The rich proud cost of out-worn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-razed,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;

When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;

When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay,
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That Time will come and take my Love away:

—This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

W. Shakespeare

6

ii

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?

O how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?

O fearful meditation! where, alack!
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back,
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?

O! none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

W. Shakespeare

7

THE PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE

Come live with me and be my Love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

There will we sit upon the rocks
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee beds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A gown made of the finest wool,
Which from our pretty lambs we pull,
Fair linéd slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold.

A belt of straw and ivy buds
With coral clasps and amber studs:
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my Love.

Thy silver dishes for thy meat
As precious as the gods do eat,
Shall on an ivory table be Prepared each day for thee and me.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May-morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my Love.

C. Marlowe

8

OMNIA VINCIT

Fain would I change that note
To which fond Love hath charm'd me
Long long to sing by rote,
Fancying that that harm'd me:

Yet when this thought doth come
'Love is the perfect sum
Of all delight,'
I have no other choice
Either for pen or voice
To sing or write.

O Love! they wrong thee much
That say thy sweet is bitter,
When thy rich fruit is such
As nothing can be sweeter.
Fair house of joy and bliss,
Where truest pleasure is,
I do adore thee:
I know thee what thou art,
I serve thee with my heart,
And fall before thee!

Anon.

9

A MADRIGAL

Crabbed Age and Youth
Cannot live together:
Youth is full of pleasance,
Age is full of care;
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather,
Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare:
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short,
Youth is nimble, Age is lame:
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold,
Youth is wild, and Age is tame:—

Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O! my Love, my Love is young!
Age, I do defy thee—
O sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinks thou stay'st too long.

W. Shakespeare

10

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat—
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets—
Come hither, come hither, come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

W. Shakespeare

11

It was a lover and his lass
With a hey and a ho, and a hey nonino!
That o'er the green corn-field did pass
In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing hey ding a ding:
Sweet lovers love the Spring.

Between the acres of the rye
These pretty country folks would lie:
This carol they began that hour,
How that life was but a flower:

And therefore take the present time
With a hey and a ho and a hey nonino!
For love is crownéd with the prime
In spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing hey ding a ding:
Sweet lovers love the Spring.

W. Shakespeare

12

PRESENT IN ABSENCE

Absence, hear thou this protestation
Against thy strength,
Distance, and length;
Do what thou canst for alteration:
For hearts of truest mettle
Absence doth join, and Time doth settle.

Who loves a mistress of such quality,
His mind hath found
Affection's ground
Beyond time, place, and mortality.
To hearts that cannot vary
Absence is present, Time doth tarry.

By absence this good means I gain,
That I can catch her,
Where none can match her,
In some close corner of my brain:
There I embrace and kiss her;
And so I both enjoy and miss her.

J. Donne

13

VIA AMORIS

High-way, since you my chief Parnassus be,
And that my Muse, to some ears not unsweet,
Tempers her words to trampling horses' feet
More oft than to a chamber melody,—

Now, blesséd you bear onward blesséd me
To her, where I my heart, safe-left, shall meet;
My Muse and I must you of duty greet
With thanks and wishes, wishing thankfully;

Be you still fair, honour'd by public heed;
By no encroachment wrong'd, nor time forgot;
Nor blamed for blood, nor shamed for sinful deed;
And that you know I envy you no lot

Of highest wish, I wish you so much bliss,—
Hundreds of years you Stella's feet may kiss!

Sir P. Sidney

14

ABSENCE

Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend
Nor services to do, till you require:

Nor dare I chide the world-without-end-hour
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour
When you have bid your servant once adieu:

Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But like a sad slave, stay and think of nought
Save, where you are, how happy you make those;—

So true a fool is love, that in your will
Though you do anything, he thinks no ill.

W. Shakespeare

15

How like a winter hath my absence been
From Thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen,
What old December's bareness everywhere!

And yet this time removed was summer's time:
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:

Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;

Or if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

W. Shakespeare

16

A CONSOLATION

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate;

Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possest,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;

Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on Thee—and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate:

For thy sweet love remember'd, such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

W. Shakespeare

17

THE UNCHANGEABLE

O never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify:
As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie;

That is my home of love; if I have ranged,
Like him that travels, I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged,
So that myself bring water for my stain.

Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good:

For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose: in it thou art my all.

W. Shakespeare

18

To me, fair Friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;

Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.

Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial-hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived:

For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred,—
Ere you were born, was beauty's summer dead.

W. Shakespeare

19

ROSALINE

Like to the clear in highest sphere
Where all imperial glory shines,
Of selfsame colour is her hair
Whether unfolded, or in twines:
  Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Her eyes are sapphires set in snow,
Resembling heaven by every wink;
The Gods do fear whenas they glow,
And I do tremble when I think
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Her cheeks are like the blushing cloud
That beautifies Aurora's face,
Or like the silver crimson shroud
That Phoebus' smiling looks doth grace;
  Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!
Her lips are like two budded roses
Whom ranks of lilies neighbour nigh,
Within which bounds she balm encloses
Apt to entice a deity:
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Her neck is like a stately tower
Where Love himself imprison'd lies,
To watch for glances every hour
From her divine and sacred eyes:
  Heigh ho, for Rosaline!
Her paps are centres of delight,
Her breasts are orbs of heavenly frame,
Where Nature moulds the dew of light
To feed perfection with the same:
  Heigh ho, would she were mine!

With orient pearl, with ruby red,
With marble white, with sapphire blue
Her body every way is fed,
Yet soft in touch and sweet in view:
  Heigh ho, fair Rosaline!

Nature herself her shape admires;
The Gods are wounded in her sight;
And Love forsakes his heavenly fires
And at her eyes his brand doth light:
Heigh ho, would she were mine!

Then muse not, Nymphs, though I bemoan
The absence of fair Rosaïine,
Since for a fair there's fairer none,
Nor for her virtues so divine:
Heigh ho, fair Rosaline;
Heigh ho, my heart! would God that she were mine!

T. Lodge

20

COLIN

Beauty sat bathing by a spring
Where fairest shades did hide her;
The winds blew calm, the birds did sing,
The cool streams ran beside her.
My wanton thoughts enticed mine eye
To see what was forbidden:
But better memory said, fie!
So vain desire was chidden:—
Hey nonny nonny O!
Hey nonny nonny!

Into a slumber then I fell,
When fond imagination
Seeméd to see, but could not tell
Her feature or her fashion.
But ev'n as babes in dreams do smile,
And sometimes fall a-weeping,
So I awaked, as wise this while
As when I fell a-sleeping:—
Hey nonny nonny O!
Hey nonny nonny!

The Shepherd Tonie

21

A PICTURE

Sweet Love, if thou wilt gain a monarch's glory,
Subdue her heart, who makes me glad and sorry:
Out of thy golden quiver
Take thou thy strongest arrow
That will through bone and marrow,
And me and thee of grief and fear deliver:—
But come behind, for if she look upon thee,
Alas! poor Love! then thou art woe-begone thee.

Anon.

22

A SONG FOR MUSIC

Weep you no more, sad fountains:—
What need you flow so fast?
Look how the snowy mountains
Heaven's sun doth gently waste!
But my Sun's heavenly eyes
View not your weeping,
That now lies sleeping
Softly, now softly lies,
Sleeping.

Sleep is a reconciling,
A rest that peace begets:—
Doth not the sun rise smiling,
When fair at even he sets?
—Rest you, then, rest, sad eyes!
Melt not in weeping!
While She lies sleeping
Softly, now softly lies,
Sleeping!

Anon.

23

TO HIS LOVE

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:

Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd:
And every fair from fair sometimes declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd.

But thy eternal summer shall not fade
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wanderest in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest:—

So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

W. Shakespeare

24

TO HIS LOVE

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights;

Then in the blazon of sweet beauty's best
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have exprest
Ev'n such a beauty as you master now.

So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all, you prefiguring;
And for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:

For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

W. Shakespeare

25

BASIA

Turn back, you wanton flyer,
And answer my desire
With mutual greeting.
Yet bend a little nearer,—
True beauty still shines clearer
In closer meeting!
Hearts with hearts delighted
Should strive to be united,
Each other's arms with arms enchaining,—
Hearts with a thought,
Rosy lips with a kiss still entertaining.

What harvest half so sweet is
As still to reap the kisses
Grown ripe in sowing?
And straight to be receiver
Of that which thou art giver,
Rich in bestowing?
There is no strict observing
Of times' or seasons' swerving,
There is ever one fresh spring abiding;
Then what we sow with our lips
Let us reap, love's gains dividing.

T. Campion

26

ADVICE TO A GIRL

Never love unless you can
Bear with all the faults of man!
Men sometimes will jealous be
Though but little cause they see,
And hang the head as discontent,
And speak what straight they will repent.

Men, that but one Saint adore,
Make a show of love to more;
Beauty must be scorn'd in none,
Though but truly served in one:
For what is courtship but disguise?
True hearts may have dissembling eyes.

Men, when their affairs require,
Must awhile themselves retire;
Sometimes hunt, and sometimes hawk,
And not ever sit and talk:—
If these and such-like you can bear,
Then like, and love, and never fear!

T. Campion

27

LOVE'S PERJURIES

On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find:
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But, alack, my hand is sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet;
Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me
That I am forsworn for thee:
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were,
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

W. Shakespeare

28

A SUPPLICATION

Forget not yet the tried intent
Of such a truth as I have meant;
My great travail so gladly spent,
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet when first began
The weary life ye know, since whan
The suit, the service none tell can;
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet the great assays,
The cruel wrong, the scornful ways,
The painful patience in delays,
Forget not yet!

Forget not! O, forget not this,
How long ago hath been, and is
The mind that never meant amiss—
Forget not yet!

Forget not then thine own approved
The which so long hath thee so loved,
Whose steadfast faith yet never moved—
Forget not this!

Sir T. Wyat

29

TO AURORA

O if thou knew'st how thou thyself dost harm,
And dost prejudge thy bliss, and spoil my rest;
Then thou would'st melt the ice out of thy breast
And thy relenting heart would kindly warm.

O if thy pride did not our joys controul,
What world of loving wonders should'st thou see!
For if I saw thee once transform'd in me,
Then in thy bosom I would pour my soul;

Then all my thoughts should in thy visage shine,
And if that aught mischanced thou should'st not moan
Nor bear the burthen of thy griefs alone;
No, I would have my share in what were thine:

And whilst we thus should make our sorrows one,
This happy harmony would make them none.

W. Alexander, Earl of Sterline

30

IN LACRIMAS

I saw my Lady weep,
And Sorrow proud to be advancéd so
In those fair eyes where all perfections keep.
Her face was full of woe,
But such a woe (believe me) as wins more hearts
Than Mirth can do with her enticing parts.

Sorrow was there made fair,
And Passion, wise; Tears, a delightful thing;
Silence, beyond all speech, a wisdom rare:
She made her sighs to sing,
And all things with so sweet a sadness move
As made my heart at once both grieve and love.

O fairer than aught else
The world can show, leave off in time to grieve!
Enough, enough: your joyful look excels:
Tears kill the heart, believe.
O strive not to be excellent in woe,
Which only breeds your beauty's overthrow.

Anon.

31

TRUE LOVE

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:—

O no! it is an ever-fixéd mark
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.

Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out ev'n to the edge of doom:—

If this be error, and upon me proved,
I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

W. Shakespeare

32

A DITTY

My true-love hath my heart, and I have his,
By just exchange one for another given:
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss,
There never was a better bargain driven:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his.

His heart in me keeps him and me in one,
My heart in him his thoughts and senses guides:
He loves my heart, for once it was his own,
I cherish his because in me it bides:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his.

Sir P. Sidney

33

LOVE'S INSIGHT

Though others may Her brow adore
Yet more must I, that therein see far more
Than any other's eyes have power to see:
She is to me
More than to any others she can be!
I can discern more secret notes
That in the margin of her cheeks Love quotes,
Than any else besides have art to read:
No looks proceed
From those fair eyes but to me wonder breed.

Anon.

34

LOVE'S OMNIPRESENCE

Were I as base as is the lowly plain,
And you, my Love, as high as heaven above,
Yet should the thoughts of me your humble swain
Ascend to heaven, in honour of my Love.

Were I as high as heaven above the plain,
And you, my Love, as humble and as low
As are the deepest bottoms of the main,
Whereso'er you were, with you my love should go.

Were you the earth, dear Love, and I the skies,
My love should shine on you like to the sun,
And look upon you with ten thousand eyes
Till heaven wax'd blind, and till the world were done.

Whereso'er I am, below, or else above you,
Whereso'er you are, my heart shall truly love you.

J. Sylvester

35

CARPE DIEM

O Mistress mine, where are you roaming?
O stay and hear! your true-love's coming
That can sing both high and low;
Trip no further, pretty sweeting,
Journeys end in lovers meeting—
Every wise man's son doth know.

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure:
In delay there lies no plenty,—
Then come kiss me, Sweet-and-twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

W. Shakespeare

36

AN HONEST AUTOLYCUS

Fine knacks for ladies, cheap, choice, brave, and new,
Good penny-worths,—but money cannot move:
I keep a fair but for the Fair to view;
A beggar may be liberal of love.
Though all my wares be trash, the heart is true—
The heart is true.

Great gifts are guiles and look for gifts again;
My trifles come as treasures from my mind;
It is a precious jewel to be plain;
Sometimes in shell the orient'st pearls we find:—
Of others take a sheaf, of me a grain!
Of me a grain!

Anon.

37

WINTER

When icicles hang by the wall
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail;
When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl
Tu-whit!
To-who! A merry note!
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

When all about the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw;
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl—
Then nightly sings the staring owl
Tu-whit!
To-who! A merry note!
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

W. Shakespeare

38

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang:

In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest:

In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourish'd by:

—This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

W. Shakespeare

39

MEMORY

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste;

Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since-cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.

Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoanéd moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before:

—But if the while I think on thee, dear Friend,
All losses are restored, and sorrows end.

W. Shakespeare

40

SLEEP

Come, Sleep: O Sleep! the certain knot of peace,
The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe,
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and low;

With shield of proof shield me from out the prease
Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth throw:
O make in me those civil wars to cease;
I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.

Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest bed,
A chamber deaf of noise and blind of light,
A rosy garland and a weary head:
And if these things, as being thine in right,

Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me,
Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image see.

Sir P. Sidney

41

REVOLUTIONS

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.

Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time that gave, doth now his gift confound.

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:—

And yet, to times in hope, my verse shall stand
Praising Thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

W. Shakespeare

42

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.

For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.

Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.

Thus have I had thee as a dream doth flatter:
In sleep, a king; but waking, no such matter.

W. Shakespeare

43

THE LIFE WITHOUT PASSION

They that have power to hurt, and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmovéd, cold, and to temptation slow,—

They rightly do inherit heaven's graces,
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others, but stewards of their excellence.

The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die;
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

W. Shakespeare

44

THE LOVER'S APPEAL

And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay! for shame,
To save thee from the blame
Of all my grief and grame.
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath loved thee so long
In wealth and woe among:
And is thy heart so strong
As for to leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath given thee my heart
Never for to depart
Neither for pain nor smart:
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
And have no more pity
Of him that loveth thee?
Alas! thy cruelty!
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

Sir T. Wyat

45

THE NIGHTINGALE

As it fell upon a day
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap and birds did sing,

Trees did grow and plants did spring;
Every thing did banish moan
Save the Nightingale alone.
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty
That to hear it was great pity.
Fie, fie, fie, now would she cry;
Teru, teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her griefs so lively shown
Made me think upon mine own.
—Ah, thought I, thou mourn'st in vain,
None takes pity on thy pain:
Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee,
Ruthless beasts, they will not cheer thee;
King Pandion, he is dead,
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead:
All thy fellow birds do sing
Careless of thy sorrowing:
Even so, poor bird, like thee
None alive will pity me.

R. Barnefield

46

Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night,
Brother to Death, in silent darkness born,
Relieve my languish, and restore the light;
With dark forgetting of my care return.

And let the day be time enough to mourn
The shipwreck of my ill-adventured youth:
Let waking eyes suffice to wail their scorn,
Without the torment of the night's untruth.

Cease, dreams, the images of day-desires,
To model forth the passions of the morrow;
Never let rising Sun approve you liars,
To add more grief to aggravate my sorrow:

Still let me sleep, embracing clouds in vain,
And never wake to feel the day's disdain.

S. Daniel

47

The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth
Unto her rested sense a perfect waking,
While late-bare earth, proud of new clothing, springeth,
Sings out her woes, a thorn her song-book making;
And mournfully bewailing,
Her throat in tunes expresseth
What grief her breast oppresseth
For Tereus' force on her chaste will prevailing.

O Philomela fair, O take some gladness,
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness:
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

Alas, she hath no other cause of anguish
But Tereus' love, on her by strong hand wroken,
Wherein she suffering, all her spirits languish,
Full womanlike complains her will was broken.
But I, who, daily craving,
Cannot have to content me,
Have more cause to lament me,
Since wanting is more woe than too much having.

O Philomela fair, O take some gladness
That here is juster cause of plaintful sadness:
Thine earth now springs, mine fadeth;
Thy thorn without, my thorn my heart invadeth.

Sir P. Sidney

48

FRUSTRA

Take, O take those lips away
That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again,
Bring again—
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain!

W. Shakespeare

49

LOVE'S FAREWELL

Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part,—
Nay I have done, you get no more of me;
And I am glad, yea, glad with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free;

Shake hands for ever, cancel all our vows,
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows
That we one jot of former love retain.

Now at the last gasp of love's latest breath,
When his pulse failing, passion speechless lies,
When faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And innocence is closing up his eyes,

—Now if thou would'st, when all have given him over,
From death to life thou might'st him yet recover!

M. Drayton

50

IN IMAGINE PER TRANSIT HOMO

Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow!
Though thou be black as night
And she made all of light,
Yet follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow!

Follow her, whose light thy light depriveth!
Though here thou liv'st disgraced,
And she in heaven is placed,
Yet follow her whose light the world reviveth!

Follow those pure beams, whose beauty burneth,
That so have scorchéd thee
As thou still black must be
Till her kind beams thy black to brightness turneth.

Follow her, while yet her glory shineth!
There comes a luckless night
That will dim all her light;
—And this the black unhappy shade divineth.

Follow still, since so thy fates ordainéd!
The sun must have his shade,
Till both at once do fade,—
The sun still proved, the shadow still disdainéd.

T. Campion

51

BLIND LOVE

O me! what eyes hath Love put in my head
Which have no correspondence with true sight:
Or if they have, where is my judgment fled
That censures falsely what they see aright?

If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: No,

How can it? O how can love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel then though I mistake my view:
The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.

O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find!

W. Shakespeare

52

Sleep, angry beauty, sleep and fear not me!
For who a sleeping lion dares provoke?
It shall suffice me here to sit and see
Those lips shut up that never kindly spoke:
What sight can more content a lover's mind
Than beauty seeming harmless, if not kind?

My words have charm'd her, for secure she sleeps,
Though guilty much of wrong done to my love;
And in her slumber, see! she close-eyed weeps:
Dreams often more than waking passions move.
Plead, Sleep, my cause, and make her soft like thee:
That she in peace may wake and pity me.

T. Campion

53

THE UNFAITHFUL SHEPHERDESS

While that the sun with his beams hot
Scorchéd the fruits in dale and mountain,
Philon the shepherd, late forgot,
Sitting beside a crystal fountain,
In shadow of a green oak tree
Upon his pipe this song play'd he:
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

So long as I was in your sight
I was your heart, your soul, and treasure;
And evermore you sobb'd and sigh'd
Burning in flames beyond all measure:
—Three days endured your love to me,
And it was lost in other three!
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Another Shepherd you did see
To whom your heart was soon enchainéd;
Full soon your love was leapt from me,
Full soon my place he had obtainéd.
Soon came a third, your love to win,
And we were out and he was in.
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Sure you have made me passing glad
That you your mind so soon removéd,
Before that I the leisure had
To choose you for my best belovéd:
For all your love was past and done
Two days before it was begun:—
Adieu, Love, adieu, Love, untrue Love,
Untrue Love, untrue Love, adieu, Love;
Your mind is light, soon lost for new love.

Anon.

54

ADVICE TO A LOVER

The sea hath many thousand sands,
The sun hath motes as many;
The sky is full of stars, and Love
As full of woes as any:
Believe me, that do know the elf,
And make no trial by thyself!

It is in truth a pretty toy
For babes to play withal:—
But O! the honeys of our youth
Are oft our age's gall!
Self-proof in time will make thee know
He was a prophet told thee so;

A prophet that, Cassandra-like,
Tells truth without belief;
For headstrong Youth will run his race,
Although his goal be grief:—
Love's Martyr, when his heat is past,
Proves Care's Confessor at the last.

Anon.

55

A RENUNCIATION

Thou art not fair, for all thy red and white,
For all those rosy ornaments in thee,—
Thou art not sweet, though made of mere delight,
Nor fair, nor sweet—unless thou pity me!
I will not soothe thy fancies; thou shalt prove
That beauty is no beauty without love.

—Yet love not me, nor seek not to allure
My thoughts with beauty, were it more divine:
Thy smiles and kisses I cannot endure,
I'll not be wrapp'd up in those arms of thine:
—Now show it, if thou be a woman right—
Embrace and kiss and love me in despite!

T. Campion

56

Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.
Heigh ho! sing heigh ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.
Heigh ho! sing heigh ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh ho! the holly!
This life is most jolly.

W. Shakespeare

57

A SWEET LULLABY

Come little babe, come silly soul,
Thy father's shame, thy mother's grief,
Born as I doubt to all our dole,
And to thy self unhappy chief:
Sing Lullaby and lap it warm,
Poor soul that thinks no creature harm.

Thou little think'st and less dost know,
The cause of this thy mother's moan,
Thou want'st the wit to wail her woe,
And I myself am all alone:
Why dost thou weep? why dost thou wail?
And knowest not yet what thou dost ail.

Come little wretch, ah silly heart,
Mine only joy, what can I more?
If there be any wrong thy smart
That may the destinies implore:
'Twas I, I say, against my will,
I wail the time, but be thou still.

And dost thou smile, oh thy sweet face!
Would God Himself He might thee see,
No doubt thou would'st soon purchase grace,
I know right well, for thee and me:
But come to mother, babe, and play,
For father false is fled away.

Sweet boy, if it by fortune chance,
Thy father home again to send,
If death do strike me with his lance,
Yet mayst thou me to him commend:
If any ask thy mother's name,
Tell how by love she purchased blame.

Then will his gentle heart soon yield,
I know him of a noble mind,
Although a Lion in the field,
A Lamb in town thou shalt him find:
Ask blessing, babe, be not afraid,
His sugar'd words hath me betray'd.

Then mayst thou joy and be right glad,
Although in woe I seem to moan,
Thy father is no rascal lad,
A noble youth of blood and bone:
His glancing looks, if he once smile,
Right honest women may beguile.

Come, little boy, and rock asleep,
Sing lullaby and be thou still,
I that can do nought else but weep;
Will sit by thee and wail my fill:
God bless my babe, and lullaby
From this thy father's quality!

Anon.

58

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies!
How silently, and with how wan a face!
What, may it be that e'en in heavenly place
That busy archer his sharp arrows tries!

Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's case,
I read it in thy looks; thy languish'd grace,
To me, that feel the like, thy state descries.

Then, e'en of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
Is constant love deem'd there but want of wit?
Are beauties there as proud as here they be?
Do they above love to be loved, and yet

Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
Do they call virtue, there, ungratefulness?

Sir P. Sidney

59

O CRUDELIS AMOR

When thou must home to shades of underground,
And there arrived, a new admired guest,
The beauteous spirits do engirt thee round,
White Iopé, blithe Helen, and the rest,
To hear the stories of thy finish'd love
From that smooth tongue whose music hell can move;

Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
Of masques and revels which sweet youth did make,
Of tourneys and great challenges of Knights,
And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake:
When thou hast told these honours done to thee,
Then tell, O tell, how thou didst murder me!

T. Campion

60

SEPHESTIA'S SONG TO HER CHILD

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee;
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.
Mother's wag, pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy;
When thy father first did see
Such a boy by him and me,
He was glad, I was woe,
Fortune changéd made him so,
When he left his pretty boy
Last his sorrow, first his joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou art old there's grief enough for thee.
Streaming tears that never stint,
Like pearl drops from a flint,
Fell by course from his eyes,
That one another's place supplies;
Thus he grieved in every part,
Tears of blood fell from his heart,
When he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.
The wanton smiled, father wept,
Mother cried, baby leapt;
More he crow'd, more we cried,
Nature could not sorrow hide:
He must go, he must kiss
Child and mother, baby bless,
For he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.
Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou art old, there's grief enough for thee.

R. Greene

61

A LAMENT

My thoughts hold mortal strife;
I do detest my life,
And with lamenting cries
Peace to my soul to bring
Oft call that prince which here doth monarchize:
—But he, grim grinning King,
Who caitiffs scorns, and doth the blest surprize,
Late having deck'd with beauty's rose his tomb,
Disdains to crop a weed, and will not come.

W. Drummond

62

DIRGE OF LOVE

Come away, come away, Death,
And in sad cypres let me be laid;
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white, stuck all with yew,
O prepare it!
My part of death, no one so true
Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown:
A thousand thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O where
Sad true lover never find my grave,
To weep there.

W. Shakespeare

63

TO HIS LUTE

My lute, be as thou wert when thou didst grow
With thy green mother in some shady grove,
When immelodious winds but made thee move,
And birds their ramage did on thee bestow.

Since that dear Voice which did thy sounds approve,
Which wont in such harmonious strains to flow,
Is reft from Earth to tune those spheres above,
What art thou but a harbinger of woe?

Thy pleasing notes be pleasing notes no more,
But orphans' wailings to the fainting ear;
Each stroke a sigh, each sound draws forth a tear;
For which be silent as in woods before:

Or if that any hand to touch thee deign,
Like widow'd turtle, still her loss complain.

W. Drummond

64

FIDELE

Fear no more the heat o' the sun
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Fear no more the frown o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Fear no more the lightning-flash
Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Fear not slander, censure rash;
Thou hast finish'd joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.

W. Shakespeare

65

A SEA DIRGE

Full fathom five thy father lies:
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark! now I hear them,—
Ding, dong, bell.

W. Shakespeare

66

A LAND DIRGE

Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren,
Since o'er shady groves they hover
And with leaves and flowers do cover
The friendless bodies of unburied men.
Call unto his funeral dole
The ant, the field-mouse, and the mole
To rear him hillocks that shall keep him warm
And (when gay tombs are robb'd) sustain no harm;
But keep the wolf far thence, that's foe to men,
For with his nails he'll dig them up again.

J. Webster

67

POST MORTEM

If Thou survive my well-contented day
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceaséd lover;

Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme
Exceeded by the height of happier men.

O then vouchsafe me but this loving thought—
'Had my friend's Muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:

But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.'

W. Shakespeare

68

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world, that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell;

Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot
If thinking on me then should make you woe.

O if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay;

Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

W. Shakespeare

69

YOUNG LOVE

Tell me where is Fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourishéd?
Reply, reply.

It is engender'd in the eyes;
With gazing fed; and Fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring Fancy's knell;
I'll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell.
—Ding, dong, bell.

W. Shakespeare

70

A DILEMMA

Lady, when I behold the roses sprouting
Which clad in damask mantles deck the arbours,
And then behold your lips where sweet love harbours,
My eyes present me with a double doubting:
For viewing both alike, hardly my mind supposes
Whether the roses be your lips, or your lips the roses.

Anon.

71

ROSALYND'S MADRIGAL

Love in my bosom, like a bee,
Doth suck his sweet;
Now with his wings he plays with me,
Now with his feet.
Within mine eyes he makes his nest,
His bed amidst my tender breast;
My kisses are his daily feast,
And yet he robs me of my rest:
Ah! wanton, will ye?

And if I sleep, then percheth he
With pretty flight,
And makes his pillow of my knee
The livelong night.
Strike I my lute, he tunes the string;
He music plays if so I sing;
He lends me every lovely thing,
Yet cruel he my heart doth sting:
Whist, wanton, will ye?

Else I with roses every day
Will whip you hence,
And bind you, when you long to play,
For your offence;
I'll shut my eyes to keep you in;
I'll make you fast it for your sin;
I'll count your power not worth a pin;
—Alas! what hereby shall I win,
If he gainsay me?

What if I beat the wanton boy
With many a rod?
He will repay me with annoy,
Because a god.
Then sit thou safely on my knee,
And let thy bower my bosom be;
Lurk in mine eyes, I like of thee,
O Cupid! so thou pity me,
Spare not, but play thee!

T. Lodge

72

CUPID AND CAMPASPE

Cupid and my Campaspé play'd
At cards for kisses; Cupid paid:
He stakes his quiver, bow, and arrows,
His mother's doves, and team of sparrows;
Loses them too; then down he throws
The coral of his lip, the rose

Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
With these, the crystal of his brow,
And then the dimple on his chin;
All these did my Campaspé win:
And last he set her both his eyes—
She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
O Love! has she done this to thee?
What shall, alas! become of me?

J. Lylye

73

Pack, clouds, away, and welcome day,
With night we banish sorrow;
Sweet air blow soft, mount larks aloft
To give my Love good-morrow!
Wings from the wind to please her mind
Notes from the lark I'll borrow;
Bird, prune thy wing, nightingale sing,
To give my Love good-morrow;
To give my Love good-morrow
Notes from them both I'll borrow.

Wake from thy nest, Robin-red-breast,
Sing, birds, in every furrow;
And from each hill, let music shrill!
Give my fair Love good-morrow!
Blackbird and thrush in every bush,
Stare, linnet, and cock-sparrow!
You pretty elves, amongst yourselves
Sing my fair Love good-morrow;
To give my Love good-morrow
Sing, birds, in every furrow!

T. Heywood

74

PROTHALAMION

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air
Sweet-breathing Zephyrus did softly play—
A gentle spirit, that lightly did delay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair;
When I, (whom sullen care,
Through discontent of my long fruitless stay
In princes' court, and expectation vain
Of idle hopes, which still do fly away
Like empty shadows, did afflict my brain)
Walk'd forth to ease my pain
Along the shore of silver-streaming Thames;
Whose rutty bank, the which his river hems,
Was painted all with variable flowers,
And all the meads adorn'd with dainty gems
Fit to deck maidens' bowers,
And crown their paramours
Against the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

There in a meadow by the river's side
A flock of nymphs I chancéd to espy,
All lovely daughters of the flood thereby,
With goodly greenish locks all loose untied
As each had been a bride;
And each one had a little wicker basket
Made of fine twigs, entrailéd curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket,
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously
The tender stalks on high.
Of every sort which in that meadow grew
They gather'd some; the violet, pallid blue,
The little daisy that at evening closes,
The virgin lily and the primrose true,

With store of vermeil roses,
To deck their bridegrooms' posies
Against the bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

With that I saw two Swans of goodly hue
Come softly swimming down along the Lee;
Two fairer birds I yet did never see;
The snow which doth the top of Pindus strow
Did never whiter show,
Nor Jove himself, when he a swan would be
For love of Leda, whiter did appear;
Yet Leda was (they say) as white as he,
Yet not so white as these, nor nothing near;
So purely white they were
That even the gentle stream, the which them bare,
Seem'd foul to them, and bade his billows spare
To wet their silken feathers, lest they might
Soil their fair plumes with water not so fair,
And mar their beauties bright
That shone as Heaven's light
Against their bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Ran all in haste to see that silver brood
As they came floating on the crystal flood;
Whom when they saw, they stood amazéd still
Their wondering eyes to fill;
Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls, so lovely, that they sure did deem
Them heavenly born, or to be that same pair
Which through the sky draw Venus' silver team;
For sure they did not seem
To be begot of any earthly seed,
But rather Angels, or of Angels' breed;
Yet were they bred of summer's heat, they say,
In sweetest season, when each flower and weed

The earth did fresh array;
So fresh they seem'd as day,
Ev'n as their bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Then forth they all out of their baskets drew
Great store of flowers, the honour of the field,
That to the sense did fragrant odours yield,
All which upon those goodly birds they threw
And all the waves did strew,
That like old Peneus' waters they did seem
When down along by pleasant Tempe's shore
Scatter'd with flowers, through Thessaly they stream,
That they appear, through lilies' plenteous store,
Like a bride's chamber-floor.
Two of those nymphs meanwhile two garlands bound
Of freshest flowers which in that mead they found,
The which presenting all in trim array,
Their snowy foreheads therewithal they crown'd;
Whilst one did sing this lay
Prepared against that day,
Against their bridal day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

'Ye gentle birds! the world's fair ornament,
And Heaven's glory, whom this happy hour
Doth lead unto your lovers' blissful bower,
Joy may you have, and gentle heart's content
Of your love's couplement;
And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son upon you smile,
Whose smile, they say, hath virtue to remove
All love's dislike, and friendship's faulty guile
For ever to assoil.
Let endless peace your steadfast hearts accord,
And blesséd plenty wait upon your board;
And let your bed with pleasures chaste abound,
That fruitful issue may to you afford

Which may your foes confound,
And make your joys redound
Upon your bridal day, which is not long;
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.'

So ended she; and all the rest around
To her redoubled that her undersong,
Which said their bridal day should not be long:
And gentle Echo from the neighbour ground
Their accents did resound.
So forth those joyous birds did pass along
Adown the Lee that to them murmur'd low,
As he would speak but that he lack'd a tongue;
Yet did by signs his glad affection show,
Making his stream run slow.
And all the fowl which in his flood did dwell
'Gan flock about these twain, that did excel
The rest, so far as Cynthia doth shend
The lesser stars. So they, enrangéd well,
Did on those two attend,
And their best service lend
Against their wedding day, which was not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

At length they all to merry London came,
To merry London, my most kindly nurse,
That to me gave this life's first native source,
Though from another place I take my name,
An house of ancient fame:
There when they came whereas those bricky towers
The which on Thames' broad agéd back do ride,
Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
There whilome wont the Templar-knights to bide,
Till they decay'd through pride;
Next whereunto there stands a stately place,
Where oft I gainéd gifts and goodly grace
Of that great lord, which therein wont to dwell,
Whose want too well now feels my friendless case;

But ah! here fits not well
Old woes, but joys to tell
Against the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

Yet therein now doth lodge a noble peer,
Great England's glory and the world's wide wonder
Whose dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near
Did make to quake and fear:
Fair branch of honour, flower of chivalry!
That fillest England with thy triumphs' fame,
Joy have thou of thy noble victory,
And endless happiness of thine own name
That promiseth the same;
That through thy prowess and victorious arms
Thy country may be freed from foreign harms,
And great Elisa's glorious name may ring
Through all the world, fill'd with thy wide alarms,
Which some brave Muse may sing
To ages following:
Upon the bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

From those high towers this noble lord issúing
Like radiant Hesper, when his golden hair
In th' ocean billows he hath bathéd fair,
Descended to the river's open viewing
With a great train ensuing.
Above the rest were goodly to be seen
Two gentle knights of lovely face and feature,
Beseeming well the bower of any queen,
With gifts of wit and ornaments of nature,
Fit for so goodly stature,
That like the twins of Jove they seem'd in sight
Which deck the baldric of the Heavens bright;
They two, forth pacing to the river's side,
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight;

Which, at th' appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride
Against their bridal day, which is not long:
Sweet Thames! run softly, till I end my song.

E. Spenser

75

THE HAPPY HEART

Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers?
O sweet content!
Art thou rich, yet is thy mind perplex'd?
O punishment!
Dost thou laugh to see how fools are vex'd
To add to golden numbers, golden numbers?
O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!
Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
Honest labour bears a lovely face;
Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

Canst drink the waters of the crispéd spring?
O sweet content!
Swimm'st thou in wealth, yet sink'st in thine own tears?
O punishment!
Then he that patiently want's burden bears
No burden bears, but is a king, a king!
O sweet content! O sweet, O sweet content!
Work apace, apace, apace, apace;
Honest labour bears a lovely face;
Then hey nonny nonny, hey nonny nonny!

T. Dekker

76

SIC TRANSIT

Come, cheerful day, part of my life to me;
For while thou view'st me with thy fading light
Part of my life doth still depart with thee,
And I still onward haste to my last night:
Time's fatal wings do ever forward fly—
So every day we live a day we die.

But O ye nights, ordain'd for barren rest,
How are my days derived of life in you
When heavy sleep my soul hath dispossest,
By feignéd death life sweetly to renew!
Part of my life, in that, you life deny:
So every day we live, a day we die.

T. Campion

77

This Life, which seems so fair,
Is like a bubble blown up in the air
By sporting children's breath,
Who chase it everywhere
And strive who can most motion it bequeath.
And though it sometimes seem of its own might
Like to an eye of gold to be fix'd there,
And firm to hover in that empty height,
That only is because it is so light.
—But in that pomp it doth not long appear;
For when 'tis most admired, in a thought,
Because it erst was nought, it turns to nought.

W. Drummond

78

SOUL AND BODY

Poor Soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
[Foil'd by] those rebel powers that thee array,
Why doth thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?

Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? is this thy body's end?

Then, Soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:—

So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And death once dead, there's no more dying then.

W. Shakespeare

79

The man of life upright,
  Whose guiltless heart is free
From all dishonest deeds,
  Or thought of vanity;

The man whose silent days
  In harmless joys are spent,
Whom hopes cannot delude
  Nor sorrow discontent:

That man needs neither towers
  Nor armour for defence,
Nor secret vaults to fly
  From thunder's violence:

He only can behold
  With unaffrighted eyes
The horrors of the deep
  And terrors of the skies.

Thus scorning all the cares
  That fate or fortune brings,
He makes the heaven his book,
  His wisdom heavenly things;

Good thoughts his only friends,
  His wealth a well-spent age,
The earth his sober inn
  And quiet pilgrimage.

T. Campion

80

THE LESSONS OF NATURE

Of this fair volume which we World do name
If we the sheets and leaves could turn with care,
Of Him who it corrects, and did it frame,
We clear might read the art and wisdom rare:

Find out His power which wildest powers doth tame,
His providence extending everywhere,
His justice which proud rebels doth not spare,
In every page, no period of the same.

But silly we, like foolish children, rest
Well pleased with colour'd vellum, leaves of gold,
Fair dangling ribbands, leaving what is best,
On the great Writer's sense ne'er taking hold;

Or if by chance we stay our minds on aught,
It is some picture on the margin wrought.

W. Drummond

81

Doth then the world go thus, doth all thus move?
Is this the justice which on earth we find?
Is this that firm decree which all doth bind?
Are these your influences, Powers above?

Those souls which vice's moody mists most blind,
Blind Fortune, blindly, most their friend doth prove:
And they who thee, poor idol Virtue! love,
Ply like a feather toss'd by storm and wind.

Ah! if a Providence doth sway this all
Why should best minds groan under most distress?
Or why should pride humility make thrall,
And injuries the innocent oppress?

Heavens! hinder, stop this fate; or grant a time
When good may have, as well as bad, their prime!

W. Drummond

82

THE WORLD'S WAY

Tired with all these, for restful death I cry—
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,

And gilded honour shamefully misplaced,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongly disgraced,
And strength by limping sway disabled,

And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly, doctor-like, controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive Good attending captain Ill:—

—Tired with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my Love alone.

W. Shakespeare

83

A WISH

Happy were he could finish forth his fate
In some unhaunted desert, where, obscure
From all society, from love and hate
Of worldly folk, there should he sleep secure;

Then wake again, and yield God ever praise;
Content with hip, with haws, and brambleberry;
In contemplation passing still his days,
And change of holy thoughts to make him merry:

Who, when he dies, his tomb might be the bush
Where harmless robin resteth with the thrush:
—Happy were he!

R. Devereux, Earl of Essex

84

SAINT JOHN BAPTIST

The last and greatest Herald of Heaven's King
Girt with rough skins, hies to the deserts wild,
Among that savage brood the woods forth bring,
Which he more harmless found than man, and mild.

His food was locusts, and what there doth spring,
With honey that from virgin hives distill'd,
Parch'd body, hollow eyes, some uncouth thing
Made him appear, long since from earth exiled.

There burst he forth: All ye whose hopes rely
On God, with me amidst these deserts mourn,
Repent, repent, and from old errors turn!
—Who listen'd to his voice, obey'd his cry?

Only the echoes, which he made relent,
Rung from their flinty caves, Repent! Repent!

W. Drummond

85

ODE ON THE MORNING OF CHRIST'S NATIVITY

This is the month, and this the happy morn
Wherein the Son of Heaven's Eternal King
Of wedded maid and virgin mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace.

That glorious Form, that Light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of Majesty
Wherewith He wont at Heaven's high council-table
To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,
He laid aside; and, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

Say, heavenly Muse, shall not thy sacred vein
Afford a present to the Infant God?
Hast thou no verse, no hymn, or solemn strain
To welcome Him to this His new abode,
Now while the heaven, by the sun's team untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch in squadrons bright?

See how from far, upon the eastern road,
The star-led wizards haste with odours sweet:
O, run, prevent them with thy humble ode
And lay it lowly at His blessed feet;
Have thou the honour first thy Lord to greet,
And join thy voice unto the Angel quire
From out His secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.

THE HYMN

It was the winter wild
While the heaven-born Child
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies;
Nature in awe to Him
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great Master so to sympathize:
It was no season then for her
To wanton with the sun, her lusty paramour.

Only with speeches fair
She woos the gentle air
To hide her guilty front with innocent snow;
And on her naked shame,
Pollute with sinful blame,
The saintly veil of maiden white to throw;
Confounded, that her Maker's eyes
Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

But He, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed Peace;
She, crown'd with olive green, came softly sliding
Down through the turning sphere,
His ready harbinger,
With turtle wing the amorous clouds dividing;
And waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.

No war, or battle's sound
Was heard the world around:
The idle spear and shield were high uphung;
The hookéd chariot stood
Unstain'd with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the arméd throng;
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sovran Lord was by.

But peaceful was the night
Wherein the Prince of Light
His reign of peace upon the earth began:
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kist
Whispering new joys to the mild oceán—
Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
While birds of calm sit brooding on the charméd wave.

The stars, with deep amaze,
Stand fix'd in steadfast gaze,
Bending one way their precious influence;
And will not take their flight
For all the morning light,
Or Lucifer that often warn'd them thence;
But in their glimmering orbs did glow
Until their Lord Himself bespake, and bid them go.

And though the shady gloom
Had given day her room,
The sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
And hid his head for shame,
As his inferior flame
The new-enlighten'd world no more should need;
He saw a greater Sun appear
Than his bright throne, or burning axletree could bear.

The shepherds on the lawn
Or ere the point of dawn
Sate simply chatting in a rustic row;
Full little thought they than
That the mighty Pan
Was kindly come to live with them below;
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep
Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep:—

When such music sweet
Their hearts and ears did greet
As never was by mortal finger strook–
Divinely-warbled voice

Answering the stringéd noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took;
The air, such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close.

Nature, that heard such sound
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won
To think her part was done,
And that her reign had here its last fulfilling;
She knew such harmony alone
Could hold all Heaven and Earth in happier union.

At last surrounds their sight
A globe of circular light
That with long beams the shamefaced night array'd;
The helméd Cherubim
And sworded Seraphim
Are seen in glittering ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire
With unexpressive notes, to Heaven's new-born Heir.

Such music (as 'tis said)
Before was never made
But when of old the Sons of Morning sung,
While the Creator great
His constellations set
And the well-balanced world on hinges hung;
And cast the dark foundations deep,
And bid the weltering waves their oozy channel keep.

Ring out, ye crystal spheres!
Once bless our human ears,
If ye have power to touch our senses so;
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;
And with your ninefold harmony
Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold;
And speckled Vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous Sin will melt from earthy mould;
And Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

Yea, Truth and Justice then
Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow; and, like glories wearing,
Mercy will sit between
Throned in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering;
And Heaven, as at some festival,
Will open wide the gates of her high palace-hall.

But wisest Fate says No;
This must not yet be so;
The Babe yet lies in smiling infancy
That on the bitter cross
Must redeem our loss;
So both Himself and us to glorify:
Yet first, to those ychain'd in sleep
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep;

With such a horrid clang
As on Mount Sinai rang
While the red fire and smouldering clouds outbrake:
The aged Earth aghast
With terror of that blast
Shall from the surface to the centre shake,
When, at the world's last session,
The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread His throne.

And then at last our bliss
Full and perfect is,

But now begins; for from this happy day
The old Dragon under ground,
In straiter limits bound,
Not half so far casts his usurpéd sway;
And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

The Oracles are dumb;
No voice or hideous hum
Runs through the archéd roof in words deceiving.
Apollo from his shrine
Can no more divine,
With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving:
No nightly trance or breathéd spell
Inspires the pale-eyed priest from the prophetic cell.

The lonely mountains o'er
And the resounding shore
A voice of weeping heard, and loud lament;
From haunted spring and dale
Edged with poplar pale
The parting Genius is with sighing sent;
With flower-inwoven tresses torn
The Nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

In consecrated earth
And on the holy hearth
The Lars and Lemurés moan with midnight plaint;
In urns, and altars round
A drear and dying round
Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint;
And the chill marble seems to sweat,
While each peculiar Power foregoes his wonted seat.

Peor and Baalim
Forsake their temples dim,
With that twice-batter'd god of Palestine;
And moonéd Ashtaroth

Heaven's queen and mother both,
Now sits not girt with tapers' holy shine;
The Lybic Hammon shrinks his horn:
In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz
mourn.

And sullen Moloch, fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals' ring
They call the grisly king,
In dismal dance about the furnace blue;
The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
Isis, and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste

Nor is Osiris seen
In Memphian grove, or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud;
Nor can he be at rest
Within his sacred chest;
Nought but profoundest Hell can be his shroud;
In vain with timbrell'd anthems dark
The sable-stoléd sorcerers bear his worshipt ark.

He feels from Juda's land
The dreaded Infant's hand;
The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyn;
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine:
Our Babe, to show His Godhead true,
Can in His swaddling bands control the damnéd crew.

So, when the sun in bed
Curtain'd with cloudy red
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale

Troop to the infernal jail,
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave;
And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night-steeds, leaving their moon-loved maze.

But see! the Virgin blest
Hath laid her Babe to rest;
Time is, our tedious song should here have ending:
Heaven's youngest-teemèd star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
Her sleeping Lord with hand-maid lamp attending:
And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harness'd Angels sit in order serviceable.

J. Milton

86

SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY, 1687

From Harmony, from heavenly Harmony
This universal frame began:
When Nature underneath a heap
Of jarring atoms lay
And could not heave her head,
The tuneful voice was heard from high,
Arise, ye more than dead!
Then cold and hot and moist and dry
In order to their stations leap,
And Music's power obey.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in Man.

What passion cannot Music raise and quell?
When Jubal struck the chorded shell
His listening brethren stood around,
And, wondering, on their faces fell
To worship that celestial sound.

Less than a god they thought there could not dwell
Within the hollow of that shell
That spoke so sweetly and so well.
What passion cannot Music raise and quell?

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger
And mortal alarms.
The double double double beat
Of the thundering drum
Cries 'Hark! the foes come;
Charge, charge, 'tis too late to retreat!'

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.

Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains, and height of passion
For the fair disdainful dame.

But oh! what art can teach,
What human voice can reach
The sacred organ's praise?
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To mend the choirs above.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees unrooted left their place
Sequacious of the lyre:
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder higher:
When to her Organ vocal breath was given,
An Angel heard, and straight appear'd—
Mistaking Earth for Heaven.

Grand Chorus

As from the power of sacred lays
  The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
  To all the blest above;
So when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.

J. Dryden

87

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEDMONT

Avenge, O Lord! Thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones
Lie scatter'd on the Alpine mountains cold;
Even them who kept Thy truth so pure of old
When all our fathers worshipt stocks and stones,

Forget not: In Thy book record their groans
Who were Thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
Slain by the bloody Piemontese, that roll'd
Mother with infant down the rocks. Their moans

The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
To Heaven. Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway

The triple Tyrant: that from these may grow
A hundred-fold, who, having learnt Thy way,
Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

J. Milton

88

HORATIAN ODE UPON CROMWELL'S RETURN FROM IRELAND

The forward youth that would appear,
Must now forsake his Muses dear,
Nor in the shadows sing
His numbers languishing.

'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
And oil the unuséd armour's rust,
Removing from the wall
The corslet of the hall.

So restless Cromwell could not cease
In the inglorious arts of peace,
But through adventurous war
Urgéd his active star:

And like the three-fork'd lightning, first
Breaking the clouds where it was nurst,
Did through his own Side
His fiery way divide:

For 'tis all one to courage high,
The emulous, or enemy;
And with such, to enclose
Is more than to oppose;

Then burning through the air he went
And palaces and temples rent;
And Caesar's head at last
Did through his laurels blast.

'Tis madness to resist or blame
The face of angry heaven's flame;
And if we would speak true,
Much to the Man is due

Who, from his private gardens, where
He lived reservéd and austere,
(As if his highest plot
To plant the bergamot,)

Could by industrious valour climb
To ruin the great work of time,
And cast the Kingdoms old
Into another mould;

Though Justice against Fate complain,
And plead the ancient Rights in vain—
But those do hold or break
As men are strong or weak;

Nature, that hateth emptiness,
Allows of penetration less,
And therefore must make room
Where greater spirits come.

What field of all the civil war
Where his were not the deepest scar?
And Hampton shows what part
He had of wiser art,

Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
He wove a net of such a scope
That Charles himself might chase
To Carisbrook's narrow case,

That thence the Royal actor borne
The tragic scaffold might adorn:
While round the arméd bands
Did clap their bloody hands.

He nothing common did or mean
Upon that memorable scene,
But with his keener eye
The axe's edge did try;

Nor call'd the Gods, with vulgar spite,
To vindicate his helpless right;
But bow'd his comely head
Down, as upon a bed.

—This was that memorable hour
Which first assured the forcéd power:
So when they did design
The Capitol's first line,

A Bleeding Head, where they begun,
Did fright the architects to run;
And yet in that the State
Foresaw its happy fate!

And now the Irish are ashamed
To see themselves in one year tamed;
So much one man can do
That does both act and know.

They can affirm his praises best,
And have, though overcome, confest
How good he is, how just
And fit for highest trust.

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
But still in the Republic's hand—
How fit he is to sway
That can so well obey!

He to the Commons' feet presents
A Kingdom for his first year's rents,
And (what he may) forbears
His fame, to make it theirs:

And has his sword and spoils ungirt
To lay them at the Public's skirt.
So when the falcon high
Falls heavy from the sky,

She, having kill'd, no more doth search
But on the next green bough to perch,
Where, when he first does lure,
The falconer has her sure.

—What may not then our Isle presume
While victory his crest does plume?
What may not others fear
If thus he crowns each year?

As Caesar he, ere long, to Gaul,
To Italy an Hannibal,
And to all States not free
Shall climacteric be.

The Pict no shelter now shall find
Within his parti-colour'd mind,
But from this valour sad
Shrink underneath the plaid—

Happy, if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake,
Nor lay his hounds in near
The Caledonian deer.

But Thou, the War's and Fortune's son
March indefatigably on;
And for the last effect
Still keep the sword erect

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power, must it maintain.

A. Marvell

89

LYCIDAS

Elegy on a Friend drowned in the Irish Channel 1637

Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forced fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.
Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
Compels me to disturb your season due:
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin then, Sisters of the sacred well
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain and coy excuse:
So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favour my destined urn;
And as he passes, turn
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.

For we were nursed upon the self-same hill,
Fed the same flock by fountain, shade, and rill:
Together both, ere the high lawns appear'd
Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
We drove a-field, and both together heard
What time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn,
Battening our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star that rose at evening bright
Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.
Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,

Temper'd to the oaten flute,
Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long;
And old Damoetas loved to hear our song.

But, oh! the heavy change, now thou art gone,
Now thou art gone, and never must return!
Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes, mourn:
The willows and the hazel copses green
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays:—
As killing as the canker to the rose,
Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear
When first the white-thorn blows;
Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep
Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?
For neither were ye playing on the steep
Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,
Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard stream:
Ay me! I fondly dream—
Had ye been there . . . For what could that have done?
What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When by the rout that made the hideous roar
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

Alas! what boots it with uncessant care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,

Or with the tangles of Neaera's hair?
Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
(That last infirmity of noble mind)
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with the abhorréd shears
And slits the thin-spun life. 'But not the praise'
Phoebus replied, and touch'd my trembling ears;
'Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistering foil
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies:
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed.'

O fountain Arethuse, and thou honour'd flood
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea
That came in Neptune's plea;
He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain?
And question'd every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beakéd promontory:
They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotadés their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon stray'd;
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panopé with all her sisters play'd.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark
Built in the eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus, reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe:

'Ah! who hath reft,' quoth he, 'my dearest pledge!'
Last came, and last did go
The Pilot of the Galilean lake;
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain);
He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake:
'How well could I have spared for thee, young swain
Enow of such, as for their bellies' sake
Creep and intrude and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learn'd aught else the least
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;
And when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread:
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said:
—But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more.

Return, Alphéus; the dread voice is past
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian Muse,
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks;
Throw hither all your quaint enamell'd eyes
That on the green turf suck the honey'd showers
And purple all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,

The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet,
The glowing violet,
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears:
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears
To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies.
For so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise:—
Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away,—where'er thy bones are hurl'd,
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides
Where thou perhaps, under the whelming tide,
Visitest the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,
Where the great Vision of the guarded mount
Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold,
—Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth:
—And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!

Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor:
So sinks the day-star in the ocean-bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of Him that walk'd the waves;
Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,

That sing, and singing, in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals gray;
He touch'd the tender stops of various quills,
With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:
And now the sun had stretch'd out all the hills,
And now was dropt into the western bay:
At last he rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

J. Milton

90

ON THE TOMBS IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY

Mortality, behold and fear
What a change of flesh is here!
Think how many royal bones
Sleep within these heaps of stones;
Here they lie, had realms and lands,
Who now want strength to stir their hands,
Where from their pulpits seal'd with dust
They preach, 'In greatness is no trust.'
Here's an acre sown indeed
With the richest royallest seed
That the earth did e'er suck in
Since the first man died for sin:
Here the bones of birth have cried
'Though gods they were, as men they died!'
Here are sands, ignoble things,
Dropt from the ruin'd sides of kings:
Here's a world of pomp and state
Buried in dust, once dead by fate.

F. Beaumont

91

THE LAST CONQUEROR

Victorious men of earth, no more
Proclaim how wide your empires are;
Though you bind-in every shore
And your triumphs reach as far
As night or day,
Yet you, proud monarchs, must obey
And mingle with forgotten ashes, when
Death calls ye to the crowd of common men,

Devouring Famine, Plague, and War
Each able to undo mankind,
Death's servile emissaries are;
Nor to these alone confined,
He hath at will
More quaint and subtle ways to kill;
A smile or kiss, as he will use the art,
Shall have the cunning skill to break a heart.

J. Shirley

92

DEATH THE LEVELLER

The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armour against fate;
Death lays his icy hand on kings:
Sceptre and Crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill:
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still:

Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow;
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon Death's purple altar now
See where the victor-victim bleeds:
Your heads must come
To the cold tomb;
Only the actions of the just
Smell sweet, and blossom in their dust.

J. Shirley

93

WHEN THE ASSAULT WAS INTENDED TO THE CITY

Captain, or Colonel, or Knight in Arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms

He can requite thee; for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.

Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower:
The great Emathian conqueror bid spare
The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower

Went to the ground: and the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the power
To save the Athenian walls from ruin bare.

J. Milton

94

ON HIS BLINDNESS

When I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days, in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent

To serve therewith my Maker, and present
My true account, lest He returning chide,—
Doth God exact day-labour, light denied?
I fondly ask:—But Patience, to prevent

That murmur, soon replies; God doth not need
Either man's work, or His own gifts: who best
Bear His mild yoke, they serve Him best: His state

Is kingly; thousands at His bidding speed
And post o'er land and ocean without rest:—
They also serve who only stand and wait.

J. Milton

95

CHARACTER OF A HAPPY LIFE

How happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armour is his honest thought
And simple truth his utmost skill!

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepared for death,
Untied unto the world by care
Of public fame, or private breath;

Who envies none that chance doth raise
Nor vice; Who never understood
How deepest wounds are given by praise;
Nor rules of state, but rules of good:

Who hath his life from rumours freed,
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors great;

Who God doth late and early pray
More of His grace than gifts to lend;
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend;

—This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall;
Lord of himself, though not of lands;
And having nothing, yet hath all.

Sir H. Wotton

96

THE NOBLE NATURE

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make Man better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sere:
A lily of a day
Is fairer far in May,
Although it fall and die that night—
It was the plant and flower of Light.
In small proportions we just beauties see;
And in short measures life may perfect be.

B. Jonson

97

THE GIFTS OF GOD

When God at first made Man,
Having a glass of blessings standing by;
Let us (said He) pour on him all we can:
Let the world's riches, which dispersèd lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flow'd, then wisdom, honour, pleasure:
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that alone, of all His treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

For if I should (said He)
Bestow this jewel also on My creature,
He would adore My gifts instead of Me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature.
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness:
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to My breast.

G. Herbert

98

THE RETREAT

Happy those early days, when I
Shined in my Angel-infancy!
Before I understood this place
Appointed for my second race,
Or taught my soul to fancy aught
But a white, celestial thought;
When yet I had not walk'd above
A mile or two from my first Love,
And looking back, at that short space
Could see a glimpse of His bright face;
When on some gilded cloud or flower
My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
And in those weaker glories spy
Some shadows of eternity;
Before I taught my tongue to wound

My conscience with a sinful sound,
Or had the black art to dispense
A several sin to every sense,
But felt through all this fleshly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.

O how I long to travel back,
And tread again that ancient track!
That I might once more reach that plain
Where first I left my glorious train;
From whence th' enlighten'd spirit sees
That shady City of palm trees!
But ah! my soul with too much stay
Is drunk, and staggers in the way:—
Some men a forward motion love,
But I by backward steps would move;
And when this dust falls to the urn,
In that state I came, return.

H. Vaughan

99

TO MR. LAWRENCE

Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son,
Now that the fields are dank and ways are mire,
Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
Help waste a sullen day, what may be won

From the hard season gaining? Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius re-inspire
The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
The lily and rose, that neither sow'd nor spun.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and choice,
Of Attic taste, with wine, whence we may rise
To hear the lute well touch'd, or artful voice

Warble immortal notes and Tuscan air?
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise.

J. Milton

100

TO CYRIACK SKINNER

Cyriack, whose grandsire, on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause
Pronounced, and in his volumes taught, our laws,
Which others at their bar so often wrench;

To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws;
Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause,
And what the Swede intend, and what the French.

To measure life learn thou betimes, and know
Toward solid good what leads the nearest way;
For other things mild Heaven a time ordains,

And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.

J. Milton

101

A HYMN IN PRAISE OF NEPTUNE

Of Neptune's empire let us sing,
At whose command the waves obey;
To whom the rivers tribute pay,
Down the high mountains sliding;
To whom the scaly nation yields
Homage for the crystal fields
Wherein they dwell;
And every sea-god pays a gem
Yearly out of his watery cell,
To deck great Neptune's diadem.

The Tritons dancing in a ring,
Before his palace gates do make
The water with their echoes quake,
Like the great thunder sounding:

The sea-nymphs chaunt their accents shrill,
And the Syrens taught to kill
With their sweet voice,
Make every echoing rock reply,
Unto their gentle murmuring noise,
The praise of Neptune's empery.

T. Campion

102

HYMN TO DIANA

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair,
Now the sun is laid to sleep,
Seated in thy silver chair
State in wonted manner keep:
Hesperus entreats thy light,
Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
Dare itself to interpose;
Cynthia's shining orb was made
Heaven to clear when day did close:
Bless us then with wishéd sight,
Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart
And thy crystal-shining quiver;
Give unto the flying hart
Space to breathe, how short soever:
Thou that mak'st a day of night,
Goddess excellently bright!

B. Jonson

103

WISHES FOR THE SUPPOSED MISTRESS

Whoe'er she be,
That not impossible She
That shall command my heart and me;

Where'er she lie,
Lock'd up from mortal eye
In shady leaves of destiny:

Till that ripe birth
Of studied Fate stand forth,
And teach her fair steps tread our earth;

Till that divine
Idea take a shrine
Of crystal flesh, through which to shine:

—Meet you her, my Wishes,
Bespeak her to my blisses,
And be ye call'd, my absent kisses.

I wish her beauty
That owes not all its duty
To gaudy tire, or glist'ring shoe-tie:

Something more than
Taffata or tissue can,
Or rampant feather, or rich fan.

A face that's best
By its own beauty drest,
And can alone commend the rest:

A face made up
Out of no other shop
Than what Nature's white hand sets ope.

Sidneian showers
Of sweet discourse, whose powers
Can crown old Winter's head with flowers.

Whate'er delight
Can make day's forehead bright
Or give down to the wings of night.

Soft silken hours,
Open suns, shady bowers;
'Bove all, nothing within that lowers.

Days, that need borrow
No part of their good morrow
From a fore-spent night of sorrow:

Days, that in spite
Of darkness, by the light
Of a clear mind are day all night.

Life, that dares send
A challenge to his end,
And when it comes, say, 'Welcome, friend.'

I wish her store
Of worth may leave her poor
Of wishes; and I wish—no more

Now, if Time knows
That Her, whose radiant brows
Weave them a garland of my vows;

Her that dares be
What these lines wish to see:
I seek no further, it is She.

'Tis She, and here
Lo! I unclothe and clear
My wishes' cloudy character

Such worth as this is
Shall fix my flying wishes,
And determine them to kisses

Let her full glory,
My fancies, fly before ye;
Be ye my fictions:—but her story.

R. Crashaw

104

THE GREAT ADVENTURER

Over the mountains
And over the waves,
Under the fountains
And under the graves;
Under floods that are deepest,
Which Neptune obey;
Over rocks that are steepest
Love will find out the way.

Where there is no place
For the glow-worm to lie;
Where there is no space
For receipt of a fly;
Where the midge dares not venture
Lest herself fast she lay;
If love come, he will enter
And soon find out his way.

You may esteem him
A child for his might;
Or you may deem him
A coward from his flight;
But if she whom love doth honour
Be conceal'd from the day,
Set a thousand guards upon her,
Love will find out the way.

Some think to lose him
By having him confined;
And some do suppose him,
Poor thing, to be blind;
But if ne'er so close ye wall him,
Do the best that you may,
Blind love, if so ye call him,
Will find out his way.

You may train the eagle
To stoop to your fist;
Or you may inveigle
The phoenix of the east;
The lioness, ye may move her
To give o'er her prey;
But you'll ne'er stop a lover:
He will find out his way.

Anon

105

THE PICTURE OF LITTLE T. C. IN A PROSPECT OF FLOWERS

See with what simplicity
This nymph begins her golden days:
In the green grass she loves to lie,
And there with her fair aspect tames
The wilder flowers, and gives them names;
But only with the roses plays,
And them does tell
What colours best become them, and what smell.

Who can foretell for what high cause
This darling of the Gods was born?
Yet this is she whose chaster laws
The wanton Love shall one day fear,
And, under her command severe,
See his bow broke, and ensigns torn.
Happy who can
Appease this virtuous enemy of man!

O then let me in time compound
And parley with those conquering eyes,
Ere they have tried their force to wound;
Ere with their glancing wheels they drive
In triumph over hearts that strive,
And them that yield but more despise:
Let me be laid,
Where I may see the glories from some shade.

Meantime, whilst every verdant thing
Itself does at thy beauty charm,
Reform the errors of the Spring;
Make that the tulips may have share
Of sweetness, seeing they are fair,
And roses of their thorns disarm;
But most procure
That violets may a longer age endure.

But O young beauty of the woods,
Whom Nature courts with fruits and flowers,
Gather the flowers, but spare the buds;
Lest Flora, angry at thy crime
To kill her infants in their prime,
Should quickly make th' example yours;
And ere we see—
Nip in the blossom—all our hopes and thee.

A. Marvell

106

CHILD AND MAIDEN

Ah, Chloris! could I now but sit
As unconcern'd as when
Your infant beauty could beget
No happiness or pain!
When I the dawn used to admire,
And praised the coming day,
I little thought the rising fire
Would take my rest away.

Your charms in harmless childhood lay
Like metals in a mine;
Age from no face takes more away
Than youth conceal'd in thine.
But as your charms insensibly
To their perfection prest,
So love as unperceived did fly,
And center'd in my breast.

My passion with your beauty grew
While Cupid at my heart,
Still as his mother favour'd you,
Threw a new flaming dart:
Each gloried in their wanton part;
To make a lover, he
Employ'd the utmost of his art—
To make a beauty, she.

Sir C. Sedley

107

CONSTANCY

I cannot change, as others do,
Though you unjustly scorn,
Since that poor swain that sighs for you,
For you alone was born:
No, Phyllis, no, your heart to move
A surer way I'll try,—
And to revenge my slighted love,
Will still love on, and die.

When, kill'd with grief, Amintas lies,
And you to mind shall call
The sighs that now unpitied rise,
The tears that vainly fall,
That welcome hour that ends his smart
Will then begin your pain,
For such a faithful tender heart
Can never break in vain.

J. Wilmot, Earl of Rochester

108

COUNSEL TO GIRLS

Gather ye rose-buds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying:
And this same flower that smiles to-day,
To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious Lamp of Heaven, the Sun
  The higher he's a-getting
The sooner will his race be run,
  And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
  When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse, and worst
  Times, still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time;
  And while ye may, go marry:
For having lost but once your prime,
  You may for ever tarry.

R. Herrick

109

TO LUCASTA, ON GOING TO THE WARS

Tell me not, Sweet, I am unkind
  That from the nunnery
Of thy chaste breast and quiet mind,
  To war and arms I fly.

True, a new mistress now I chase,
  The first foe in the field;
And with a stronger faith embrace
  A sword, a horse, a shield.

Yet this inconstancy is such
  As you too shall adore;
I could not love thee, Dear, so much,
  Loved I not Honour more.

Colonel Lovelace

110

ELIZABETH OF BOHEMIA

You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly satisfy our eyes
More by your number than your light,
You common people of the skies,
What are you, when the Moon shall rise?

You curious chanters of the wood
That warble forth dame Nature's lays,
Thinking your passions understood
By your weak accents; what's your praise
When Philomel her voice doth raise?

You violets that first appear,
By your pure purple mantles known
Like the proud virgins of the year,
As if the spring were all your own,—
What are you, when the Rose is blown?

So when my Mistress shall be seen
In form and beauty of her mind,
By virtue first, then choice, a Queen,
Tell me, if she were not design'd
Th' eclipse and glory of her kind?

Sir H. Wotton

111

TO THE LADY MARGARET LEY

Daughter to that good Earl, once President
Of England's Council and her Treasury,
Who lived in both, unstain'd with gold or fee,
And left them both, more in himself content,

Till the sad breaking of that Parliament
Broke him, as that dishonest victory
At Chaeroneia, fatal to liberty,
Kill'd with report that old man eloquent;—

Though later born than to have known the days
Wherein your father flourish'd, yet by you,
Madam, methinks I see him living yet;

So well your words his noble virtues praise,
That all both judge you to relate them true,
And to possess them, honour'd Margaret.

J. Milton

112

THE TRUE BEAUTY

He that loves a rosy cheek
  Or a coral lip admires,
Or from star-like eyes doth seek
  Fuel to maintain his fires;
As old Time makes these decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
  Gentle thoughts, and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combined,
  Kindle never-dying fires:—
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheeks or lips or eyes.

T. Carew

113

TO DIANEME

Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes
Which starlike sparkle in their skies;
Nor be you proud, that you can see
All hearts your captives; yours yet free:
Be you not proud of that rich hair
Which wantons with the lovesick air;
Whenas that ruby which you wear,
Sunk from the tip of your soft ear,
Will last to be a precious stone
When all your world of beauty's gone.

R. Herrick

114

Love in thy youth, fair Maid, be wise;
Old Time will make thee colder,
And though each morning new arise
Yet we each day grow older.

Thou as Heaven art fair and young,
Thine eyes like twin stars shining;
But ere another day be sprung
All these will be declining.
Then winter comes with all his fears,
And all thy sweets shall borrow;
Too late then wilt thou shower thy tears,—
And I too late shall sorrow!

Anon.

115

Go, lovely Rose!
Tell her, that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

Tell her that's young
And shuns to have her graces spied,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended died.

Small is the worth
Of beauty from the light retired:
Bid her come forth,
Suffer herself to be desired,
And not blush so to be admired.

Then die! that she
The common fate of all things rare
May read in thee:
How small a part of time they share
That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

E. Waller

116

TO CELIA

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup
And I'll not look for wine.
The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
Not so much honouring thee
As giving it a hope that there
It could not wither'd be;
But thou thereon didst only breathe
And sent'st it back to me;
Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
Not of itself but thee!

B. Jonson

117

CHERRY-RIPE

There is a garden in her face
Where roses and white lilies blow;
A heavenly paradise is that place,
Wherein all pleasant fruits do grow;
There cherries grow that none may buy,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry.

Those cherries fairly do enclose
Of orient pearl, a double row,
Which when her lovely laughter shows,
They look like rose-buds fill'd with snow:
Yet them no peer nor prince may buy,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
Her brows like bended bows do stand,
Threat'ning with piercing frowns to kill
All that approach with eye or hand
These sacred cherries to come nigh,
Till Cherry-Ripe themselves do cry!

Anon.

118

CORINNA'S MAYING

Get up, get up for shame! The blooming morn
Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
See how Aurora throws her fair
Fresh-quilted colours through the air:
Get up, sweet Slug-a-bed, and see
The dew bespangling herb and tree.
Each flower has wept, and bow'd toward the east,
Above an hour since; yet you not drest,
Nay! not so much as out of bed?
When all the birds have matins said,
And sung their thankful hymns: 'tis sin,
Nay, profanation, to keep in,—
Whenas a thousand virgins on this day,
Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch-in May.

Rise; and put on your foliage, and be seen
To come forth, like the Spring-time, fresh and green
And sweet as Flora. Take no care
For jewels for your gown, or hair:
Fear not; the leaves will strew
Gems in abundance upon you:

Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
Against you come, some orient pearls unwept:
Come, and receive them while the light
Hangs on the dew-locks of the night:
And Titan on the eastern hill
Retires himself, or else stands still
Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief in praying:
Few beads are best, when once we go a Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and coming, mark
How each field turns a street; each street a park
Made green, and trimm'd with trees: see how Devotion gives each house a bough
Or branch: Each porch, each door, ere this,
An ark, a tabernacle is,
Made up of white-thorn neatly interwove;
As if here were those cooler shades of love.
Can such delights be in the street,
And open fields, and we not see't?
Come we'll abroad: and let's obey
The proclamation made for May:
And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a Maying.

There's not a budding boy, or girl, this day,
But is got up, and gone to bring in May.
A deal of youth, ere this, is come
Back, and with white-thorn laden home.
Some have despatch'd their cakes and cream,
Before that we have left to dream:
And some have wept, and woo'd, and plighted troth,
And chose their priest, ere we can cast off sloth:
Many a green-gown has been given;
Many a kiss, both odd and even:
Many a glance too has been sent
From out the eye, Love's firmament:
Many a jest told of the keys betraying
This night, and locks pick'd:—Yet we're not a Maying.

—Come, let us go, while we are in our prime;
And take the harmless folly of the time!
We shall grow old apace, and die
Before we know our liberty.
Our life is short; and our days run
As fast away as does the sun:—
And as a vapour, or a drop of rain
Once lost, can ne'er be found again:
So when or you or I are made
A fable, song, or fleeting shade;
All love, all liking, all delight
Lies drown'd with us in endless night.
Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
Come, my Corinna! come, let's go a Maying.

R. Herrick

119

THE POETRY OF DRESS

i

A sweet disorder in the dress
Kindles in clothes a wantonness:—
A lawn about the shoulders thrown
Into a fine distraction,—
An erring lace, which here and there
Enthrals the crimson stomacher,—
A cuff neglectful, and thereby
Ribbands to flow confusedly,—
A winning wave, deserving note,
In the tempestuous petticoat,—
A careless shoe-string, in whose tie
I see a wild civility,—
Do more bewitch me, than when art
Is too precise in every part.

R. Herrick

120

ii

Whenas in silks my Julia goes
Then, then (methinks) how sweetly flows
That liquefaction of her clothes.

Next, when I cast mine eyes and see
That brave vibration each way free;
O how that glittering taketh me!

R. Herrick

121 iii

My Love in her attire doth shew her wit,
It doth so well become her:
For every season she hath dressings fit,
For Winter, Spring, and Summer.
No beauty she doth miss
When all her robes are on:
But Beauty's self she is
When all her robes are gone.

Anon.

122

ON A GIRDLE

That which her slender waist confined
Shall now my joyful temples bind:
No monarch but would give his crown
His arms might do what this has done.

It was my Heaven's extremest sphere,
The pale which held that lovely deer:
My joy, my grief, my hope, my love
Did all within this circle move.

A narrow compass! and yet there
Dwelt all that's good, and all that's fair:
Give me but what this ribband bound,
Take all the rest the Sun goes round.

E. Waller

123

A MYSTICAL ECSTASY

E'en like two little bank-dividing brooks,
That wash the pebbles with their wanton streams,
And having ranged and search'd a thousand nooks,
Meet both at length in silver-breasted Thames,
Where in a greater current they conjoin:
So I my Best-Belovéd's am; so He is mine.

E'en so we met; and after long pursuit,
E'en so we join'd; we both became entire;
No need for either to renew a suit.
For I was flax and he was flames of fire:
Our firm-united souls did more than twine;
So I my Best-Belovéd's am; so He is mine.

If all those glittering Monarchs that command
The servile quarters of this earthly ball,
Should tender, in exchange, their shares of land,
I would not change my fortunes for them all
Their wealth is but a counter to my coin:
The world's but theirs; but my Belovéd's mine.

F. Quarles

124

TO ANTHEA WHO MAY COMMAND HIM ANY THING

Bid me to live, and I will live
  Thy Protestant to be:
Or bid me love, and I will give
  A loving heart to thee.

A heart as soft, a heart as kind,
  A heart as sound and free
As in the whole world thou canst find,
  That heart I'll give to thee.

Bid that heart stay, and it will stay,
  To honour thy decree:
Or bid it languish quite away,
  And 't shall do so for thee.

Bid me to weep, and I will weep
  While I have eyes to see:
And having none, yet I will keep
  A heart to weep for thee.

Bid me despair, and I'll despair,
  Under that cypress tree:
Or bid me die, and I will dare
  E'en Death, to die for thee.

Thou art my life, my love, my heart,
  The very eyes of me,
And hast command of every part,
  To live and die for thee.

R. Herrick

125

Love not me for comely grace,
For my pleasing eye or face,
Nor for any outward part,
No, nor for my constant heart,—

For those may fail, or turn to ill,
So thou and I shall sever:
Keep therefore a true woman's eye,
And love me still, but know not why—
So hast thou the same reason still
To doat upon me ever!

Anon.

126

Not, Celia, that I juster am
Or better than the rest;
For I would change each hour, like them,
Were not my heart at rest.

But I am tied to very thee
By every thought I have;
Thy face I only care to see,
Thy heart I only crave.

All that in woman is adored
In thy dear self I find—
For the whole sex can but afford
The handsome and the kind.

Why then should I seek further store,
And still make love anew?
When change itself can give no more,
'Tis easy to be true.

Sir C. Sedley

127

TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON

When Love with unconfinéd wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates;

When I lie tangled in her hair
And fetter'd to her eye,
The Gods that wanton in the air
Know no such liberty.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
With no allaying Thames,
Our careless heads with roses bound,
Our hearts with loyal flames;
When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
When healths and draughts go free—
Fishes that tipple in the deep
Know no such liberty.

When, (like committed linnets), I
With shriller throat shall sing
The sweetness, mercy, majesty
And glories of my King;
When I shall voice aloud how good
He is, how great should be,
Enlargéd winds, that curl the flood,
Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor iron bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage;
If I have freedom in my love
And in my soul am free,
Angels alone, that soar above,
Enjoy such liberty.

Colonel Lovelace.

128

TO LUCASTA, GOING BEYOND THE SEAS

If to be absent were to be
Away from thee;
Or that when I am gone
You or I were alone;
Then, my Lucasta, might I crave
Pity from blustering wind, or swallowing wave.

But I'll not sigh one blast or gale
To swell my sail,
Or pay a tear to 'suage
The foaming blue-god's rage;
For whether he will let me pass
Or no, I'm still as happy as I was.

Though seas and land betwixt us both,
Our faith and troth,
Like separated souls,
All time and space controls:
Above the highest sphere we meet
Unseen, unknown, and greet as Angels greet.

So then we do anticipate
Our after-fate,
And are alive i' the skies,
If thus our lips and eyes
Can speak like spirits unconfined
In Heaven, their earthy bodies left behind.

Colonel Lovelace

129

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO A LOVER

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
Prythee, why so pale?
Will, if looking well can't move her,
Looking ill prevail?
Prythee, why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
Prythee, why so mute?
Will, when speaking well can't win her
Saying nothing do't?
Prythee, why so mute?

Quit, quit, for shame! this will not move,
This cannot take her;
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her:
The D—l take her!

Sir J. Suckling

130

A SUPPLICATION

Awake, awake, my Lyre!
And tell thy silent master's humble tale
In sounds that may prevail;
Sounds that gentle thoughts inspire:
Though so exalted she
And I so lowly be
Tell her, such different notes make all thy harmony.

Hark, how the strings awake!
And, though the moving hand approach not near,
Themselves with awful fear
A kind of numerous trembling make.
Now all thy forces try;
Now all thy charms apply;
Revenge upon her ear the conquests of her eye.

Weak Lyre! thy virtue sure
Is useless here, since thou art only found
To cure, but not to wound,
And she to wound, but not to cure.
Too weak too, wilt thou prove
My passion to remove;
Physic to other ills, thou'rt nourishment to Love.

Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre!
For thou canst never tell my humble tale
In sounds that will prevail,
Nor gentle thoughts in her inspire;
All thy vain mirth lay by,
Bid thy strings silent lie,
Sleep, sleep again, my Lyre, and let thy master die.

A. Cowley

131

THE MANLY HEART

Shall I, wasting in despair,
Die because a woman's fair?
Or make pale my cheeks with care
'Cause another's rosy are?
Be she fairer than the day
Or the flowery meads in May—
If she think not well of me
What care I how fair she be?

Shall my silly heart be pined
'Cause I see a woman kind;
Or a well disposéd nature
Joinéd with a lovely feature?
Be she meeker, kinder than
Turtle-dove or pelican,
If she be not so to me
What care I how kind she be?

Shall a woman's virtues move
Me to perish for her love?
Or her well-deservings known
Make me quite forget mine own?
Be she with that goodness blest
Which may merit name of Best;
If she be not such to me,
What care I how good she be?

'Cause her fortune seems too high,
Shall I play the fool and die?
She that bears a noble mind
If not outward helps she find,
Thinks what with them he would do
Who without them dares her woo;
And unless that mind I see,
What care I how great she be?

Great or good, or kind or fair,
I will ne'er the more despair;
If she love me, this believe,
I will die ere she shall grieve;
If she slight me when I woo,
I can scorn and let her go;
For if she be not for me,
What care I for whom she be?

G. Wither

132

MELANCHOLY

Hence, all you vain delights,
As short as are the nights
Wherein you spend your folly:
There's nought in this life sweet
If man were wise to see't
But only melancholy,
O sweetest Melancholy!
Welcome, folded arms, and fixéd eyes
A sigh that piercing mortifies,
A look that's fasten'd to the ground,
A tongue chain'd up without a sound!
Fountain-heads and pathless groves,
Places which pale passion loves!
Moonlight walks, when all the fowls
Are warmly housed save bats and owls!

A midnight bell, a parting groan!
These are the sounds we feed upon:
Then stretch our bones in a still gloomy valley;
Nothing's so dainty sweet as lovely melancholy.
J. Fletcher

133

FORSAKEN

O waly waly up the bank,
And waly waly down the brae,
And waly waly yon burn-side
Where I and my Love wont to gae!
I leant my back unto an aik,
I thought it was a trusty tree;
But first it bow'd, and syne it brak,
Sae my true Love did lichtly me.

O waly waly, but love be bonny
A little time while it is new;
But when 'tis auld, it waxeth cauld
And fades awa' like morning dew.
O wherefore should I busk my head?
Or wherefore should I kame my hair?
For my true Love has me forsook,
And says he'll never loe me mair.

Now Arthur-seat sall be my bed;
The sheets shall ne'er be prest by me:
Saint Anton's well sall be my drink,
Since my true Love has forsaken me.
Marti'mas wind, when wilt thou blaw
And shake the green leaves aff the tree?
O gentle Death, when wilt thou come?
For of my life I am wearie.

'Tis not the frost, that freezes fell,
Nor blawing snaw's inclemencie;
'Tis not sic cauld that makes me cry,
But my Love's heart grown cauld to me.

When we came in by Glasgow town
We were a comely sight to see;
My Love was clad in the black velvét,
And I myself in cramasie.

But had I wist, before I kist,
That love had been sae ill to win;
I had lockt my heart in a case of gowd
And pinn'd it with a siller pin.
And, O! if my young babe were born,
And set upon the nurse's knee,
And I myself were dead and gane,
And the green grass growing over me!

Anon.

134

Upon my lap my sovereign sits
And sucks upon my breast;
Meantime his love maintains my life
And gives my sense her rest.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

When thou hast taken thy repast,
Repose, my babe, on me;
So may thy mother and thy nurse
Thy cradle also be.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

I grieve that duty doth not work
All that my wishing would,
Because I would not be to thee
But in the best I should.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

Yet as I am, and as I may,
I must and will be thine,
Though all too little for thy self
Vouchsafing to be mine.
Sing lullaby, my little boy,
Sing lullaby, mine only joy!

Anon.

135

FAIR HELEN

I wish I were where Helen lies;
Night and day on me she cries;
O that I were where Helen lies
On fair Kirconnell lea!

Curst be the heart that thought the thought,
And curst the hand that fired the shot,
When in my arms burd Helen dropt,
And died to succour me!

O think na but my heart was sair
When my Love dropt down and spak nae mair!
I laid her down wi' meikle care
On fair Kirconnell lea.

As I went down the water-side,
None but my foe to be my guide,
None but my foe to be my guide,
On fair Kirconnell lea;

I lighted down my sword to draw,
I hackéd him in pieces sma',
I hackéd him in pieces sma',
For her sake that died for me.

O Helen fair, beyond compare!
I'll make a garland of thy hair
Shall bind my heart for evermair
Until the day I die.

O that I were where Helen lies!
Night and day on me she cries;
Out of my bed she bids me rise,
Says, 'Haste and come to me!'

O Helen fair! O Helen chaste!
If I were with thee, I were blest,
Where thou lies low and takes thy rest
On fair Kirconnell lea.

I wish my grave were growing green,
A winding-sheet drawn ower my een,
And I in Helen's arms lying,
On fair Kirconnell lea.

I wish I were where Helen lies;
Night and day on me she cries;
And I am weary of the skies,
Since my Love died for me.

Anon.

136

THE TWA CORBIES

As I was walking all alane
I heard twa corbies making a mane;
The tane unto the t'other say,
'Where sall we gang and dine today?'

'—In behint yon auld fail dyke,
I wot there lies a new-slain Knight;
And naebody kens that he lies there,
But his hawk, his hound, and lady fair.

'His hound is to the hunting gane,
His hawk to fetch the wild-fowl hame,
His lady's ta'en another mate,
So we may mak our dinner sweet.

'Ye'll sit on his white hause-bane,
And I'll pick out his bonnie blue een:
Wi' ae lock o' his gowden hair
We'll theek our nest when it grows bare.

'Mony a one for him makes mane,
But nane sall ken where he is gane;
O'er his white banes, when they are bare,
The wind sall blaw for evermair.'

Anon.

137

ON THE DEATH OF MR. WILLIAM HERVEY

It was a dismal and a fearful night,—
Scarce could the Morn drive on th' unwilling light,
When sleep, death's image, left my troubled breast,
By something liker death possest,
My eyes with tears did uncommanded flow,
And on my soul hung the dull weight
Of some intolerable fate.
What bell was that? Ah me! Too much I know!

My sweet companion, and my gentle peer,
Why hast thou left me thus unkindly here,
Thy end for ever, and my life, to moan?
O thou hast left me all alone!
Thy soul and body, when death's agony
Besieged around thy noble heart,
Did not with more reluctance part
Than I, my dearest friend, do part from thee.

Ye fields of Cambridge, our dear Cambridge, say,
Have ye not seen us, walking every day?
Was there a tree about which did not know
The love betwixt us two?
Henceforth, ye gentle trees, for ever fade,
Or your sad branches thicker join,
And into darksome shades combine,
Dark as the grave wherein my friend is laid.

Large was his soul; as large a soul as e'er
Submitted to inform a body here;
High as the place 'twas shortly in Heaven to have,
But low and humble as his grave;
So high that all the virtues there did come
As to the chiefest seat
Conspicuous, and great;
So low that for me too it made a room.

Knowledge he only sought, and so soon caught,
As if for him knowledge had rather sought;
Nor did more learning ever crowded lie
In such a short mortality.
Whene'er the skilful youth discoursed or writ,
Still did the notions throng
About his eloquent tongue;
Nor could his ink flow faster than his wit.

His mirth was the pure spirits of various wit,
Yet never did his God or friends forget.
And when deep talk and wisdom came in view,
Retired, and gave to them their due.
For the rich help of books he always took,
Though his own searching mind before
Was so with notions written o'er,
As if wise Nature had made that her book.

With as much zeal, devotion, piety,
He always lived, as other saints do die.
Still with his soul severe account he kept,
Weeping all debts out ere he slept.
Then down in peace and innocence he lay,
Like the sun's laborious light,
Which still in water sets at night,
Unsullied with his journey of the day.

A. Cowley

138

FRIENDS IN PARADISE

They are all gone into the world of light!
And I alone sit lingering here;
Their very memory is fair and bright,
And my sad thoughts doth clear:—

It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast,
Like stars upon some gloomy grove,
Or those faint beams in which this hill is dreſt
After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
Whose light doth trample on my days:
My days, which are at best but dull and hoary
Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy Hope! and high Humility,
High as the heavens above!
These are your walks, and you have shew'd them me,
To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous Death! the jewel of the just,
Shining no where, but in the dark;
What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust,
Could man outlook that mark!

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest, may know
At first sight, if the bird be flown;
But what fair well or grove he sings in now,
That is to him unknown.

And yet, as Angels in some brighter dreams
Call to the soul, when man doth sleep;
So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes,
And into glory peep.

H. Vaughan

139

TO BLOSSOMS

Fair pledges of a fruitful tree,
Why do ye fall so fast?
Your date is not so past,
But you may stay yet here awhile
To blush and gently smile,
And go at last.

What, were ye born to be
An hour or half's delight,
And so to bid good-night?
'Twas pity Nature brought ye forth
Merely to show your worth,
And lose you quite.

But you are lovely leaves, where we
May read how soon things have
Their end, though ne'er so brave:
And after they have shown their pride
Like you, awhile, they glide
Into the grave.

R. Herrick

140

TO DAFFODILS

Fair Daffodils, we weep to see
You haste away so soon:
As yet the early-rising Sun
Has not attain'd his noon.
Stay, stay,
Until the hasting day
Has run
But to the even-song;
And, having pray'd together, we
Will go with you along.

We have short time to stay, as you,
We have as short a Spring;
As quick a growth to meet decay
As you, or any thing.
We die,
As your hours do, and dry
Away
Like to the Summer's rain;
Or as the pearls of morning's dew
Ne'er to be found again.

R. Herrick

141

THE GIRL DESCRIBES HER FAWN.

With sweetest milk and sugar first
I it at my own fingers nursed;
And as it grew, so every day
It wax'd more white and sweet than they—
It had so sweet a breath! and oft
I blush'd to see its foot more soft
And white,—shall I say,—than my hand?
Nay, any lady's of the land!

It is a wondrous thing how fleet
'Twas on those little silver feet:
With what a pretty skipping grace
It oft would challenge me the race:—
And when 't had left me far away
'Twould stay, and run again, and stay:
For it was nimbler much than hinds,
And trod as if on the four winds.

I have a garden of my own,
But so with roses overgrown
And lilies, that you would it guess
To be a little wilderness;
And all the spring-time of the year
It only lovéd to be there.

Among the beds of lilies I
Have sought it oft, where it should lie;
Yet could not, till itself would rise,
Find it, although before mine eyes:—
For in the flaxen lilies' shade
It like a bank of lilies laid.

Upon the roses it would feed,
Until its lips e'en seem'd to bleed:
And then to me 'twould boldly trip,
And print those roses on my lip.
But all its chief delight was still
On roses thus itself to fill,
And its pure virgin limbs to fold
In whitest sheets of lilies cold:—
Had it lived long, it would have been
Lilies without—roses within.

A. Marvell

142

THOUGHTS IN A GARDEN

How vainly men themselves amaze
To win the palm, the oak, or bays,
And their uncessant labours see
Crown'd from some single herb or tree,
Whose short and narrow-vergéd shade
Does prudently their toils upbraid;
While all the flowers and trees do close
To weave the garlands of Repose.

Fair Quiet, have I found thee here,
And Innocence thy sister dear!
Mistaken long, I sought you then
In busy companies of men:
Your sacred plants, if here below,
Only among the plants will grow:
Society is all but rude
To this delicious solitude.

No white nor red was ever seen
So amorous as this lovely green.
Fond lovers, cruel as their flame,
Cut in these trees their mistress' name:
Little, alas, they know or heed
How far these beauties hers exceed!
Fair trees! wheres'e'er your barks I wound,
No name shall but your own be found.

When we have run our passions' heat
Love hither makes his best retreat:
The gods, who mortal beauty chase,
Still in a tree did end their race;
Apollo hunted Daphne so,
Only that she might laurel grow;
And Pan did after Syrinx speed
Not as a nymph, but for a reed.

What wondrous life is this I lead!
Ripe apples drop about my head;
The luscious clusters of the vine
Upon my mouth do crush their wine;
The nectarine and curious peach
Into my hands themselves do reach;
Stumbling on melons, as I pass,
Ensnared with flowers, I fall on grass.

Meanwhile the mind from pleasure less
Withdraws into its happiness;
The mind, that ocean where each kind
Does straight its own resemblance find;
Yet it creates, transcending these,
Far other worlds, and other seas;
Annihilating, all that's made
To a green thought in a green shade.

Here at the fountain's sliding foot
Or at some fruit-tree's mossy root,
Casting the body's vest aside
My soul into the boughs does glide;

There like a bird, it sits and sings,
Then whets and claps its silver wings,
And, till prepared for longer flight,
Waves in its plumes the various light.

Such was that happy Garden-state
While man there walk'd without a mate:
After a place so pure and sweet,
What other help could yet be meet!
But 'twas beyond a mortal's share
To wander solitary there:
Two paradises 'twere in one,
To live in Paradise alone.

How well the skilful gardener drew
Of flowers and herbs this dial new!
Where, from above, the milder sun
Does through a fragrant zodiac run:
And, as it works, th' industrious bee
Computes its time as well as we.
How could such sweet and wholesome hours
Be reckon'd, but with herbs and flowers!

A. Marvell

143

FORTUNATI NIMIUM

Jack and Joan, they think no ill,
But loving live, and merry still;
Do their week-day's work, and pray
Devoutly on the holy-day:
Skip and trip it on the green,
And help to choose the Summer Queen;
Lash out at a country feast
Their silver penny with the best.

Well can they judge of nappy ale,
And tell at large a winter tale;
Climb up to the apple loft,
And turn the crabs till they be soft.

Tib is all the father's joy.
And little Tom the mother's boy:—
All their pleasure is, Content,
And care, to pay their yearly rent.

Joan can call by name her cows
And deck her windows with green boughs;
She can wreaths and tutties make,
And trim with plums a bridal cake.
Jack knows what brings gain or loss,
And his long flail can stoutly toss:
Makes the hedge which others break,
And ever thinks what he doth speak.

—Now, you courtly dames and knights,
That study only strange delights,
Though you scorn the homespun gray,
And revel in your rich array;
Though your tongues dissemble deep
And can your heads from danger keep;
Yet, for all your pomp and train,
Securer lives the silly swain!

T. Campion

144

L'ALLEGRO

Hence, loathéd Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian cave forlorn
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!
Find out some uncouth cell
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings
And the night-raven sings;
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.

But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heaven yclept Euphrosyne,
And by men, heart-easing Mirth,
Whom lovely Venus at a birth
With two sister Graces more
To ivy-crownéd Bacchus bore;
Or whether (as some sager sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a-Maying—
There on beds of violets blue
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair.

Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
Jest, and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathéd smiles
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;
Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides:—
Come, and trip it as you go
On the light fantastic toe;
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty;
And if I give thee honour due
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee
In unreprovéd pleasures free;
To hear the lark begin his flight
And singing startle the dull night
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good-morrow
Through the sweetbriar, or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine:
While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin,

And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before:
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
From the side of some hoar hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill:
Sometime walking, not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern gate
Where the great Sun begins his state
Robed in flames and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
While the ploughman, near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scythe,
And every shepherd tells his tale
Under the hawthorn in the dale.

Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures
Whilst the landscape round it measures;
Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
Mountains, on whose barren breast
The labouring clouds do often rest;
Meadows trim with daisies pied,
Shallow brooks, and rivers wide;
Towers and battlements it sees
Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
Where perhaps some Beauty lies,
The Cynosure of neighbouring eyes.

Hard by, a cottage chimney smokes
From betwixt two aged oaks,
Where Corydon and Thyrsis, met,
Are at their savoury dinner set
Of herbs, and other country messes
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses;
And then in haste her bower she leaves
With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;

Or, if the earlier season lead,
To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
Sometimes with secure delight
The upland hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And the jocund rebecks sound
To many a youth and many a maid,
Dancing in the chequer'd shade;
And young and old come forth to play
On a sun-shine holyday,
Till the live-long day-light fail:
Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
With stories told of many a feat,
How Faery Mab the junkets eat:—
She was pinch'd and pull'd, she said;
And he, by Friar's lantern led;
Tells how the drudging Goblin sweat
To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
That ten day-labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fiend,
And, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
And crop-full out of doors he flings,
Ere the first cock his matin rings.
Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep.
Tower'd cities please us then
And the busy hum of men,
Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize
Of wit or arms, while both contend
To win her grace, whom all commend.
There let Hymen oft appear
In saffron robe, with taper clear,

And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
With mask, and antique pageantry;
Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream.
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.
And ever against eating cares
Lap me in soft Lydian airs
Married to immortal verse,
Such as the meeting soul may pierce
In notes, with many a winding bout
Of linkéd sweetness long drawn out,
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony;
That Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber, on a bed
Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice.
These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

J. Milton

145

IL PENSEROSO

Hence, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred!
How little you bestead
Or fill the fixéd mind with all your toys!

Dwell in some idle brain,
And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sunbeams,
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.

But hail, thou goddess sage and holy,
Hail, divinest Melancholy!
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight,
And therefore to our weaker view
O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,
Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
To set her beauty's praise above
The sea-nymphs, and their powers offended:
Yet thou art higher far descended:
Thee bright-hair'd Vesta, long of yore,
To solitary Saturn bore;
His daughter she; in Saturn's reign
Such mixture was not held a stain:
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
While yet there was no fear of Jove.
Come pensive Nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole of Cipres lawn
Over thy decent shoulders drawn:
Come, but keep thy wonted state,
With even step, and musing gait,
And looks commercing with the skies,
Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes:
There, held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble, till

With a sad leaden downward cast
Thou fix them on the earth as fast:
And join with thee calm Peace, and Quiet,
Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
And hears the Muses in a ring
Aye round about Jove's altar sing:
And add to these retired Leisure
That in trim gardens takes his pleasure:—
But first and chiefest, with thee bring
Him that yon soars on golden wing
Guiding the fiery-wheeléd throne,
The cherub Contemplatión;
And the mute Silence hist along,
'Less Philomel will deign a song
In her sweetest saddest plight
Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke
Gently o'er the accustom'd oak.
—Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chauntress, oft, the woods among
I woo, to hear thy even-song;
And missing thee, I walk unseen
On the dry smooth-shaven green,
To behold the wandering Moon
Riding near her highest noon,
Like one that had been led astray
Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
And oft, as if her head she bow'd,
Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
Oft, on a plat of rising ground
I hear the far-off Curfeu sound
Over some wide-water'd shore,
Swinging slow with sullen roar:
Or, if the air will not permit,
Some still removéd place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom;

Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the bellman's drowsy charm
To bless the doors from nightly harm.
  Or let my lamp at midnight hour
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
With thrice-great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind, that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook:
And of those demons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
Whose power hath a true consent
With planet, or with element.
Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
Or the tale of Troy divine;
Or what (though rare) of later age
Ennobled hath the buskin'd stage.
  But, O sad Virgin, that thy power
Might raise Musaeus from his bower,
Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek
And made Hell grant what Love did seek!
Or call up him that left half-told
The story of Cambuscan bold,
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canacé to wife
That own'd the virtuous ring and glass;
And of the wondrous horse of brass
On which the Tartar king did ride:
And if aught else great bards beside
In sage and solemn tunes have sung
Of turneys, and of trophies hung,

Of forests, and enchantments drear,
Where more is meant than meets the ear.
Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited Morn appear,
Not trick'd and frounced as she was wont
With the Attic Boy to hunt,
But kercheft in a comely cloud
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves
With minute drops from off the eaves.
And when the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To archéd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
Of pine, or monumental oak,
Where the rude axe, with heavéd stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt
Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
There in close covert by some brook
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's garish eye,
While the bee with honey'd thigh
That at her flowery work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort as they keep
Entice the dewy-feather'd Sleep;
And let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings in airy stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
Softly on my eyelids laid:
And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
Above, about, or underneath,
Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
Or the unseen Genius of the wood.
But let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,

And love the high-embowéd roof,
With antique pillars massy proof,
And storied windows richly dight
Casting a dim religious light.
There let the pealing organ blow
To the full-voiced quire below
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies,
And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew;
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.

These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
And I with thee will choose to live.

J. Milton

146

SONG OF THE EMIGRANTS IN BERMUDA.

Where the remote Bermudas ride
In the ocean's bosom unespied,
From a small boat that row'd along
The listening winds received this song.
'What should we do but sing His praise
That led us through the watery maze
Where He the huge sea-monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs,
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own?
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms, and prelate's rage:

He gave us this eternal Spring
Which here enamels everything,
And sends the fowls to us in care
On daily visits through the air.
He hangs in shades the orange bright
Like golden lamps in a green night,
And does in the pomegranates close
Jewels more rich than Ormus shows:
He makes the figs our mouths to meet
And throws the melons at our feet;
But apples plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice.
With cedars chosen by His hand
From Lebanon He stores the land;
And makes the hollow seas that roar
Proclaim the ambergris on shore.
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The Gospel's pearl upon our coast;
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple where to sound His name.
Oh! let our voice His praise exalt
Till it arrive at Heaven's vault,
Which thence (perhaps) rebounding may
Echo beyond the Mexique bay!'
—Thus sung they in the English boat
A holy and a cheerful note:
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time.

A. Marvell

147

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC

Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious Sisters, Voice and Verse!
Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,
Dead things with inbreathed sense able to pierce;

And to our high-raised phantasy present
That undisturbéd Song of pure concent
Aye sung before the sapphire-colour'd throne
To Him that sits thereon,
With saintly shout and solemn jubilee;
Where the bright Seraphim in burning row
Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow;
And the Cherubic host in thousand quires
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires,
With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devout and holy psalms
Singing everlastingly:
That we on Earth, with undiscording voice
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime, and with harsh din
Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd
In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good.
O may we soon again renew that Song,
And keep in tune with Heaven, till God ere long
To His celestial consort us unite,
To live with Him, and sing in endless morn of light!

J. Milton

148

NOX NOCTI INDICAT SCIENTIAM

When I survey the bright
Celestial sphere:
So rich with jewels hung, that night
Doth like an Ethiop bride appear;

My soul her wings doth spread,
And heaven-ward flies,
The Almighty's mysteries to read
In the large volumes of the skies.

For the bright firmament
Shoots forth no flame
So silent, but is eloquent
In speaking the Creator's name.

No unregarded star
Contracts its light
Into so small a character,
Removed far from our human sight

But if we steadfast look,
We shall discern
In it as in some holy book,
How man may heavenly knowledge learn.

It tells the Conqueror,
That far-stretch'd power
Which his proud dangers traffic for
Is but the triumph of an hour.

That from the farthest North
Some nation may
Yet undiscover'd issue forth,
And o'er his new-got conquest sway.

Some nation yet shut in
With hills of ice,
May be let out to scourge his sin,
Till they shall equal him in vice.

And then they likewise shall
Their ruin have;
For as yourselves your Empires fall,
And every Kingdom hath a grave.

Thus those celestial fires,
Though seeming mute,
The fallacy of our desires
And all the pride of life, confute.

For they have watch'd since first
The world had birth:
And found sin in itself accursed,
And nothing permanent on earth.

W. Habington

149

HYMN TO DARKNESS

Hail thou most sacred venerable thing!
What Muse is worthy thee to sing?
Thee, from whose pregnant universal womb
All things, ev'n Light, thy rival, first did come.
What dares he not attempt that sings of thee,
Thou first and greatest mystery?
Who can the secrets of thy essence tell?
Thou, like the light of God, art inaccessible.

Before great Love this monument did raise,
This ample theatre of praise;
Before the folding circles of the sky
Were tuned by Him, Who is all harmony;
Before the morning Stars their hymn began,
Before the council held for man,
Before the birth of either time or place,
Thou reign'st unquestion'd monarch in the empty space.

Thy native lot thou didst to Light resign,
But still half of the globe is thine.
Here with a quiet, but yet awful hand,
Like the best emperors thou dost command.
To thee the stars above their brightness owe,
And mortals their repose below:
To thy protection fear and sorrow flee,
And those that weary are of light, find rest in thee.

J. Norrris of Bemerton

150

A VISION

I saw Eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
All calm, as it was bright:—
And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days, years
Driven by the spheres,
Like a vast shadow moved, in which the World
And all her train were hurl'd.

H. Vaughan

151

ALEXANDER'S FEAST, OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC

'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son—
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne;
His valiant peers were placed around,
Their brows with roses and with myrtles bound,
(So should desert in arms be crown'd);
The lovely Thais by his side
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride
In flower of youth and beauty's pride:—
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave
None but the brave
None but the brave deserves the fair!

Timotheus placed on high
Amid the tuneful quire
With flying fingers touch'd the lyre:
The trembling notes ascend the sky
And heavenly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove
Who left his blissful seats above—

Such is the power of mighty love!
A dragon's fiery form belied the god;
Sublime on radiant spires he rode
When he to fair Olympia prest,
And while he sought her snowy breast,
Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.
—The listening crowd admire the lofty sound;
A present deity! they shout around:
A present deity! the vaulted roofs rebound:
With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god;
Affects to nod
And seems to shake the spheres.

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young:
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets, beat the drums!
Flush'd with a purple grace
He shows his honest face:
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes!
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

Soothed with the sound, the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again,
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew
the slain!
The master saw the madness rise,
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;

And while he Heaven and Earth defied
Changed his hand and check'd his pride.
He chose a mournful Muse
Soft pity to infuse:
He sung Darius great and good,
By too severe a fate
Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
Fallen from his high estate,
And weltering in his blood;
Deserted at his utmost need
By those his former bounty fed;
On the bare earth exposed he lies
With not a friend to close his eyes.
—With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of Chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow.

The mighty master smiled to see
That love was in the next degree;
'Twas but a kindred-sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love.
Softly sweet, in Lydian measures
Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.
War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble;
Never ending, still beginning,
Fighting still, and still destroying;
If the world be worth thy winning,
Think, O think, it worth enjoying:
Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
Take the good the gods provide thee!
—The many rend the skies with loud applause;
So love was crown'd, but Music won the cause.
The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gazed on the fair
Who caused his care,

And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again:
At length with love and wine at once opprest
The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.

Now strike the golden lyre again:
A louder yet, and yet a louder strain!
Break his bands of sleep asunder
And rouse him like a rattling peal of thunder.
Hark, hark! the horrid sound
Has raised up his head:
As awaked from the dead
And amazed he stares around.
Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,
See the Furies arise!
See the snakes that they rear
How they hiss in their hair,
And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!
Behold a ghastly band,
Each a torch in his hand!
Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain
And unburied remain
Inglorious on the plain:
Give the vengeance due
To the valiant crew!
Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes
And glittering temples of their hostile gods.
—The princes applaud with a furious joy:
And the King seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;
Thais led the way
To light him to his prey,
And like another Helen, fired another Troy!

—Thus, long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learn'd to blow,
While organs yet were mute,
Timotheus, to his breathing flute

And sounding lyre
Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft desire.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With Nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown before.
—Let old Timotheus yield the prize
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down!

J. Dryden

152

ODE ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM VICISSITUDE

Now the golden Morn aloft
  Waves her dew-bespangled wing,
  With vermeil cheek and whisper soft
  She woos the tardy Spring:
Till April starts, and calls around
The sleeping fragrance from the ground,
And lightly o'er the living scene
Scatters his freshest, tenderest green.

New-born flocks, in rustic dance,
  Frisking ply their feeble feet;
Forgetful of their wintry trance
  The birds his presence greet:
But chief, the sky-lark warbles high
His trembling thrilling ecstasy;
And lessening from the dazzled sight,
Melts into air and liquid light.

Yesterday the sullen year
  Saw the snowy whirlwind fly;
Mute was the music of the air,
  The herd stood drooping by:
Their raptures now that wildly flow
No yesterday nor morrow know;
'Tis Man alone that joy descries
With forward and reverted eyes.

Smiles on past misfortune's brow
  Soft reflection's hand can trace,
And o'er the cheek of sorrow throw
  A melancholy grace;

While hope prolongs our happier hour,
Or deepest shades, that dimly lour
And blacken round our weary way,
Gilds with a gleam of distant day.

Still, where rosy pleasure leads,
See a kindred grief pursue;
Behind the steps that misery treads
Approaching comfort view;
The hues of bliss more brightly glow
Chastised by sabler tints of woe,
And blended form, with artful strife,
The strength and harmony of life.

See the wretch that long has tost
On the thorny bed of pain,
At length repair his vigour lost
And breathe and walk again:
The meanest floweret of the vale,
The simplest note that swells the gale,
The common sun, the air, the skies,
To him are opening Paradise.

T. Gray

153

ODE TO SIMPLICITY

O Thou, by Nature taught
To breathe her genuine thought
In numbers warmly pure, and sweetly strong;
Who first, on mountains wild,
In Fancy, loveliest child,
Thy babe, or Pleasure's, nursed the powers of song!

Thou, who with hermit heart,
Disdain'st the wealth of art,
And gauds, and pageant weeds, and trailing pall,
But com'st, a decent maid
In Attic robe array'd,
O chaste, unboastful Nymph, to thee I call!

By all the honey'd store
On Hybla's thymy shore,
By all her blooms and mingled murmurs dear;
By her whose love-lorn woe
In evening musings slow
Soothed sweetly sad Electra's poet's ear:

By old Cephisus deep,
Who spread his wavy sweep
In warbled wanderings round thy green retreat;
On whose enamell'd side,
When holy Freedom died,
No equal haunt allured thy future feet:—

O sister meek of Truth,
To my admiring youth
Thy sober aid and native charms infuse!
The flowers that sweetest breathe,
Though Beauty cull'd the wreath,
Still ask thy hand to range their order'd hues.

While Rome could none esteem
But Virtue's patriot theme,
You loved her hills, and led her laureat band;
But stay'd to sing alone
To one distinguish'd throne;
And turn'd thy face, and fled her alter'd land.

No more, in hall or bower,
The Passions own thy power;
Love, only Love, her forceless numbers mean:
For thou hast left her shrine;
Nor olive more, nor vine,
Shall gain thy feet to bless the servile scene.

Though taste, though genius, bless
To some divine excess,
Faints the cold work till thou inspire the whole;
What each, what all supply
May court, may charm our eye;
Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting soul!

Of these let others ask
To aid some mighty task;
I only seek to find thy temperate vale;
Where oft my reed might sound
To maids and shepherds round,
And all thy sons, O Nature! learn my tale.

W. Collins

154

SOLITUDE

Happy the man, whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire;
Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years, slide soft away
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day,

Sound sleep by night; study and ease
Together mixt, sweet recreation,
And innocence, which most does please
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown;
Thus unlamented let me die;
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

A. Pope

155

THE BLIND BOY

O say what is that thing call'd Light,
Which I must ne'er enjoy;
What are the blessings of the sight,
O tell your poor blind boy!

You talk of wondrous things you see,
You see the sun shines bright;
I feel him warm, but how can he
Or make it day or night?

My day or night myself I make
Whene'er I sleep or play;
And could I ever keep awake
With me 'twere always day.

With heavy sighs I often hear
You mourn my hapless woe;
But sure with patience I can bear
A loss I ne'er can know.

Then let not what I cannot have
My cheer of mind destroy:
Whilst thus I sing, I am a king,
Although a poor blind boy.

C. Cibber

156

ON A FAVOURITE CAT, DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLD FISHES

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dyed
The azure flowers that blow,
Demurest of the tabby kind
The pensive Selima, reclined,
Gazed on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declared:
The fair round face, the snowy beard,
The velvet of her paws,
Her coat that with the tortoise vies,
Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes—
She saw, and purr'd applause.

Still had she gazed, but 'midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue
Through richest purple, to the view
Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless Nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first, and then a claw
With many an ardent wish
She stretch'd, in vain, to reach the prize—
What female heart can gold despise?
What Cat's averse to fish?

Presumptuous maid! with looks intent
Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
Nor knew the gulf between—
Malignant Fate sat by and smiled—
The slippery verge her feet beguiled;
She tumbled headlong in!

Eight times emerging from the flood
She mew'd to every watery God
Some speedy aid to send:—
No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd,
Nor cruel Tom nor Susan heard—
A favourite has no friend!

From hence, ye Beauties! undeceived
Know one false step is ne'er retrieved,
And be with caution bold:
Not all that tempts your wandering eyes
And heedless hearts, is lawful prize,
Nor all that glisters, gold!

T. Gray

158

TO CHARLOTTE PULTENEY

Timely blossom, Infant fair,
Fondling of a happy pair,
Every morn and every night
Their solicitous delight,
Sleeping, waking, still at ease,
Pleasing, without skill to please;
Little gossip, blithe and hale,
Tattling many a broken tale,
Singing many a tuneless song,
Lavish of a heedless tongue;
Simple maiden, void of art,
Babbling out the very heart,
Yet abandon'd to thy will,
Yet imagining no ill,
Yet too innocent to blush;
Like the linnet in the bush
To the mother-linnet's note
Moduling her slender throat;
Chirping forth thy petty joys,
Wanton in the change of toys,
Like the linnet green, in May
Flitting to each bloomy spray;
Wearied then and glad of rest,
Like the linnet in the nest:—
This thy present happy lot
This, in time will be forgot:
Other pleasures, other cares,
Ever-busy Time prepares;
And thou shalt in thy daughter see,
This picture, once, resembled thee.

A. Philips

158

RULE BRITANNIA

When Britain first at Heaven's command
Arose from out the azure main,
This was the charter of her land,
And guardian angels sung the strain:
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves.

The nations not so blest as thee
Must in their turn to tyrants fall,
Whilst thou shalt flourish great and free
The dread and envy of them all.

Still more majestic shalt thou rise,
More dreadful from each foreign stroke;
As the loud blast that tears the skies
Serves but to root thy native oak.

Thee haughty tyrants ne'er shall tame;
All their attempts to bend thee down
Will but arouse thy generous flame,
And work their woe and thy renown.

To thee belongs the rural reign;
Thy cities shall with commerce shine;
All thine shall be the subject main,
And every shore it circles thine!

The Muses, still with Freedom found,
Shall to thy happy coast repair;
Blest Isle, with matchless beauty crown'd
And manly hearts to guard the fair:—
Rule, Britannia! Britannia rules the waves!
Britons never shall be slaves!

J. Thomson

159

THE BARD

Pindaric Ode

'Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait;
Tho' fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing
They mock the air with idle state.
Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail,
Nor e'en thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears!'
—Such were the sounds that o'er the crested pride
Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon's shaggy side
He wound with toilsome march his long array:—
Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless trance;
'To arms!' cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quivering lance.

On a rock, whose haughty brow
Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
Robed in the sable garb of woe
With haggard eyes the Poet stood;
(Loose his beard and hoary hair
Stream'd like a meteor to the troubled air)
And with a master's hand and prophet's fire
Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre:
'Hark, how each giant-oak and desert-cave
Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
O'er thee, oh King! their hundred arms they wave,
Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe;
Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.

'Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
That hush'd the stormy main:
Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
Mountains, ye mourn in vain
Modred, whose magic song

Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topt head.
On dreary Arvon's shore they lie
Smear'd with gore and ghastly pale:
Far, far aloof the affrighted ravens sail;
The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
Dear as the light that visits these sad eyes,
Dear as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
No more I weep; They do not sleep;
On yonder cliffs, a griesly band,
I see them sit; They linger yet,
Avengers of their native land:
With me in dreadful harmony they join,
And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

Weave the warp and weave the woof
The winding sheet of Edward's race:
Give ample room and verge enough
The characters of hell to trace.
Mark the year, and mark the night,
When Severn shall re-echo with affright
The shrieks of death thro' Berkley's roof that ring
Shrieks of an agonizing king!
She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs
That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled mate,
From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
The scourge of heaven! What terrors round him wait!
Amazement in his van, with flight combined,
And sorrow's faded form, and solitude behind.

'Mighty victor, mighty lord,
Low on his funeral couch he lies!
No pitying heart, no eye, afford
A tear to grace his obsequies.
Is the sable warrior fled?
Thy son is gone. He rests among the dead.

The swarm that in thy noon-tide beam were born?
—Gone to salute the rising morn.
Fair laughs the Morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes:
Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm:
Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway,
That hush'd in grim repose expects his evening prey.

'Fill high the sparkling bowl,
The rich repast prepare;
Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast:
Close by the regal chair
Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
A baleful smile upon their baffled guest,
Heard ye the din of battle bray,
Lance to lance, and horse to horse?
Long years of havock urge their destined course,
And thro' the kindred squadrons mow their way.
Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
Revere his consort's faith, his father's fame,
And spare the meek usurper's holy head!
Above, below, the rose of snow,
Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:
The bristled boar in infant-gore
Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
Now, brothers, bending o'er the accursèd loom,
Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom.

'Edward, lo! to sudden fate
(Weave we the woof; The thread is spun;)
Half of thy heart we consecrate.
(The web is wove; The work is done.)
—Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn
Leave me unbless'd, unpitied, here to mourn:
In yon bright track that fires the western skies
They melt, they vanish from my eyes.

But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height
  Descending slow their glittering skirts unroll?
Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul!
No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail:—
All hail, ye genuine kings! Britannia's issue, hail!

'Girt with many a baron bold
Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
  And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old
In bearded majesty, appear.
In the midst a form divine!
Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-line:
Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face
Attemper'd sweet to virgin-grace.
What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
  What strains of vocal transport round her play?
Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear;
  They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
Bright Rapture calls, and soaring as she sings,
Waves in the eye of heaven her many-colour'd wings.

'The verse adorn again
  Fierce war, and faithful love,
And truth severe, by fairy fiction drest.
  In buskin'd measures move
Pale grief, and pleasing pain,
With horror, tyrant of the throbbing breast.
A voice as of the cherub-choir
  Gales from blooming Eden bear,
  And distant warblings lessen on my ear
That lost in long futurity expire.
Fond impious man, think'st thou yon sanguine cloud
  Raised by thy breath, has quench'd the orb of day?
To-morrow he repairs the golden flood
  And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
Enough for me: with joy I see
  The different doom our fates assign:
Be thine despair and sceptred care,

To triumph and to die are mine.'
—He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's height
Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night.

T. Gray

160

ODE WRITTEN IN 1746

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung:
There Honour comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there!

W. Collins

161

LAMENT FOR CULLODEN

The lovely lass o' Inverness,
Nae joy nor pleasure can she see;
For e'en and morn she cries, Alas!
And aye the saut tear blins her ee:
Drumossie moor—Drumossie day—
A waefu' day it was to me!
For there I lost my father dear,
My father dear, and brethren three.

Their winding-sheet the bluidy clay,
Their graves are growing green to see:
And by them lies the dearest lad
That ever blest a woman's ee!

Now wae to thee, thou cruel lord,
A bluidy man I trow thou be;
For mony a heart thou hast made sair
That ne'er did wrang to thine or thee.

R. Burns

162

LAMENT FOR FLODDEN

I've heard them lilting at our ewe-milking,
Lasses a' lilting before dawn o' day;
But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning—
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

At bughts, in the morning, nae blythe lads are scorning,
Lasses are lonely and dowie and wae;
Nae daffin', nae gabbin', but sighing and sabbing,
Ilk ane lifts her leglin and hies her away.

In har'st, at the shearing, nae youths now are jeering,
Bandsters are lyart, and runkled, and gray;
At fair or at preaching, nae wooing, nae fleeching—
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

At e'en, in the gloaming, nae younkers are roaming
'Bout stacks wi' the lasses at bogle to play;
But ilk ane sits drearie, lamenting her dearie—
The Flowers of the Forest are weded away.

Dool and wae for the order, sent our lads to the Border!
The English, for ance, by guile wan the day;
The Flowers of the Forest, that fought aye the foremost,
The prime of our land, are cauld in the clay.

We'll hear nae mair lilting at the ewe-milking;
Women and bairns are heartless and wae;
Sighing and moaning on ilka green loaning—
The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away.

J. Elliott

163

THE BRAES OF YARROW

Thy braes were bonny, Yarrow stream,
When first on them I met my lover;
Thy braes how dreary, Yarrow stream,
When now thy waves his body cover!
For ever now, O Yarrow stream!
Thou art to me a stream of sorrow;
For never on thy banks shall I
Behold my Love, the flower of Yarrow!

He promised me a milk-white steed
To bear me to his father's bowers;
He promised me a little page
To squire me to his father's towers;
He promised me a wedding ring,—
The wedding-day was fix'd to-morrow;—
Now he is wedded to his grave,
Alas, his watery grave, in Yarrow!

Sweet were his words when last we met:
My passion I as freely told him;
Clasp'd in his arms, I little thought
That I should never more behold him;
Scarce was he gone, I saw his ghost;
It vanish'd with a shriek of sorrow;
Thrice did the water-wraith ascend,
And gave a doleful groan thro' Yarrow.

His mother from the window look'd
With all the longing of a mother;
His little sister weeping walk'd
The green-wood path to meet her brother;
They sought him east, they sought him west,
They sought him all the forest thorough;
They only saw the cloud of night,
They only heard the roar of Yarrow.

No longer from thy window look—
Thou hast no son, thou tender mother!
No longer walk, thou lovely maid;
Alas, thou hast no more a brother!
No longer seek him east or west
And search no more the forest thorough;
For, wandering in the night so dark,
He fell a lifeless corpse in Yarrow.

The tear shall never leave my cheek,
No other youth shall be my marrow—
I'll seek thy body in the stream,
And then with thee I'll sleep in Yarrow.
—The tear did never leave her cheek,
No other youth became her marrow;
She found his body in the stream,
And now with him she sleeps in Yarrow.

J. Logan

164

WILLY DROWNED IN YARROW

Down in yon garden sweet and gay
Where bonnie grows the lily,
I heard a fair maid sighing say,
'My wish be wi' sweet Willie!

'Willie's rare, and Willie's fair,
And Willie's wondrous bonny;
And Willie hecht to marry me
Gin e'er he married ony.

'O gentle wind, that bloweth south
From where my Love repaireth,
Convey a kiss frae his dear mouth
And tell me how he fareth!

'O tell sweet Willie to come doun
And hear the mavis singing,
And see the birds on ilka bush
And leaves around them hinging.

'The lav'rock there, wi' her white breast
And gentle throat sae narrow;
There's sport eneuch for gentlemen
On Leader haughs and Yarrow.

'O Leader haughs are wide and braid
And Yarrow haughs are bonny;
There Willie hecht to marry me
If e'er he married ony.

'But Willie's gone, whom I thought on,
And does not hear me weeping;
Draws many a tear frae true love's e'e
When other maids are sleeping.

'Yestreen I made my bed fu' braid,
The night I'll mak' it narrow,
For a' the live-lang winter night
I lie twined o' my marrow.

'O came ye by yon water-side?
Pou'd you the rose or lily?
Or came you by yon meadow green,
Or saw you my sweet Willie?'

She sought him up, she sought him down,
She sought him braid and narrow;
Syne, in the cleaving of a craig,
She found him drown'd in Yarrow!

Anon.

165

LOSS OF THE ROYAL GEORGE

Toll for the Brave!
The brave that are no more!
All sunk beneath the wave
Fast by their native shore!

Eight hundred of the brave
Whose courage well was tried,
Had made the vessel heel
And laid her on her side.

A land-breeze shook the shrouds
And she was overset;
Down went the Royal George,
With all her crew complete.

Toll for the brave!
Brave Kempenfelt is gone;
His last sea-fight is fought,
His work of glory done.

It was not in the battle;
No tempest gave the shock;
She sprang no fatal leak,
She ran upon no rock.

His sword was in its sheath,
His fingers held the pen,
When Kempenfelt went down
With twice four hundred men.

—Weigh the vessel up
Once dreaded by our foes!
And mingle with our cup
The tears that England owes.

Her timbers yet are sound,
And she may float again
Full charged with England's thunder,
And plough the distant main:

But Kempenfelt is gone,
His victories are o'er;
And he and his eight hundred
Shall plough the wave no more.

W. Cowper

166

BLACK-EYED SUSAN

All in the Downs the fleet was moor'd,
  The streamers waving in the wind,
When black-eyed Susan came aboard;
  'O! where shall I my true-love find?
Tell me, ye jovial sailors, tell me true
If my sweet William sails among the crew.'

William, who high upon the yard
  Rock'd with the billow to and fro,
Soon as her well-known voice he heard
  He sigh'd, and cast his eyes below:
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands
And quick as lightning on the deck he stands.

So the sweet lark, high poised in air,
  Shuts close his pinions to his breast
If chance his mate's shrill call he hear,
  And drops at once into her nest:—
The noblest captain in the British fleet
Might envy William's lip those kisses sweet.

'O Susan, Susan, lovely dear,
  My vows shall ever true remain;
Let me kiss off that falling tear;
  We only part to meet again.
Change as ye list, ye winds; my heart shall be
The faithful compass that still points to thee.

'Believe not what the landmen say
  Who tempt with doubts thy constant mind;
They'll tell thee, sailors, when away,
  In every port a mistress find:
Yes, yes, believe them when they tell thee so,
For Thou art present wheresoe'er I go.

'If to fair India's coast we sail,
Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright,
Thy breath is Afric's spicy gale,
Thy skin is ivory so white.
Thus every beauteous object that I view
Wakes in my soul some charm of lovely Sue.

'Though battle call me from thy arms
Let not my pretty Susan mourn;
Though cannons roar, yet safe from harms
William shall to his Dear return.
Love turns aside the balls that round me fly,
Lest precious tears should drop from Susan's eye.'

The boatswain gave the dreadful word,
The sails their swelling bosom spread,
No longer must she stay aboard;
They kiss'd, she sigh'd, he hung his head.
Her lessening boat unwilling rows to land;
'Adieu!' she cries; and waved her lily hand.

J. Gay

167

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY

Of all the girls that are so smart
There's none like pretty Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.
There is no lady in the land
Is half so sweet as Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

Her father he makes cabbage-nets
And through the streets does cry 'em;
Her mother she sells laces long
To such as please to buy 'em.

But sure such folks could ne'er beget
So sweet a girl as Sally!
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

When she is by, I leave my work,
I love her so sincerely;
My master comes like any Turk,
And bangs me most severely—
But let him bang his bellyful,
I'll bear it all for Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

Of all the days that's in the week
I dearly love but one day—
And that's the day that comes betwixt
A Saturday and Monday;
For then I'm drest all in my best
To walk abroad with Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

My master carries me to church,
And often am I blamed
Because I leave him in the lurch
As soon as text is named;
I leave the church in sermon-time
And slink away to Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

When Christmas comes about again
O then I shall have money;
I'll hoard it up, and box it all,
I'll give it to my honey;
I would it were ten thousand pound,
I'd give it all to Sally;
She is the darling of my heart,
And she lives in our alley.

My master and the neighbours all
  Make game of me and Sally,
And, but for her, I'd better be
  A slave and row a galley;
But when my seven long years are out
  O then I'll marry Sally,—
O then we'll wed, and then we'll bed...
  But not in our alley!

H. Carey

168

A FAREWELL

Go fetch to me a pint o' wine,
  An' fill it in a silver tassie;
That I may drink before I go
  A service to my bonnie lassie:
The boat rocks at the pier o' Leith,
  Fu' loud the wind blaws frae the ferry,
The ship rides by the Berwick-law,
  And I maun leave my bonnie Mary.

The trumpets sound, the banners fly,
  The glittering spears are rankéd ready;
The shouts o' war are heard afar,
  The battle closes thick and bloody;
But it's not the roar o' sea or shore
  Wad make me langer wish to tarry;
Nor shout o' war that's heard afar—
  It's leaving thee, my bonnie Mary.

R. Burns

169

If doughty deeds my lady please
  Right soon I'll mount my steed;
And strong his arm, and fast his seat
  That bears frae me the meed.
I'll wear thy colours in my cap,
  Thy picture at my heart;

And he that bends not to thine eye
Shall rue it to his smart!
Then tell me how to woo thee, Love;
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake, nae care I'll take
Tho' ne'er another trow me.

If gay attire delight thine eye
I'll dight me in array;
I'll tend thy chamber door all night,
And squire thee all the day.
If sweetest sounds can win thine ear,
These sounds I'll strive to catch;
Thy voice I'll steal to woo thysell,
That voice that nane can match.

But if fond love thy heart can gain,
I never broke a vow;
Nae maiden lays her skaith to me,
I never loved but you.
For you alone I ride the ring,
For you I wear the blue;
For you alone I strive to sing,
O tell me how to woo!
Then tell me how to woo thee, Love;
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake, nae care I'll take,
Tho' ne'er another trow me.

R. Graham of Gartmore

170

TO A YOUNG LADY

Sweet stream, that winds through yonder glade,
Apt emblem of a virtuous maid—
Silent and chaste she steals along,
Far from the world's gay busy throng:
With gentle yet prevailing force,
Intent upon her destined course;

Graceful and useful all she does,
Blessing and blest where'er she goes;
Pure-bosom'd as that watery glass,
And Heaven reflected in her face.

W. Cowper

171

THE SLEEPING BEAUTY

Sleep on, and dream of Heaven awhile—
Tho' shut so close thy laughing eyes,
Thy rosy lips still wear a smile
And move, and breathe delicious sighs!

Ah, now soft blushes tinge her cheeks
And mantle o'er her neck of snow:
Ah, now she murmurs, now she speaks
What most I wish—and fear to know!

She starts, she trembles, and she weeps!
Her fair hands folded on her breast:
—And now, how like a saint she sleeps!
A seraph in the realms of rest!

Sleep on secure! Above controul
Thy thoughts belong to Heaven and thee:
And may the secret of thy soul
Remain within its sanctuary!

S. Rogers

172

For ever, Fortune, wilt thou prove
An unrelenting foe to Love,
And when we meet a mutual heart
Come in between, and bid us part?

Bid us sigh on from day to day,
And wish and wish the soul away;
Till youth and genial years are flown,
And all the life of life is gone?

But busy, busy, still art thou,
To bind the loveless joyless vow,
The heart from pleasure to delude,
To join the gentle to the rude.

For once, O Fortune, hear my prayer,
And I absolve thy future care;
All other blessings I resign,
Make but the dear Amanda mine.

J. Thomson

173

The merchant, to secure his treasure,
Conveys it in a borrow'd name:
Euphelia serves to grace my measure,
But Cloe is my real flame.

My softest verse, my darling lyre
Upon Euphelia's toilet lay—
When Cloe noted her desire
That I should sing, that I should play.

My lyre I tune, my voice I raise,
But with my numbers mix my sighs;
And whilst I sing Euphelia's praise,
I fix my soul on Cloe's eyes.

Fair Cloe blush'd: Euphelia frown'd:
I sung, and gazed; I play'd, and trembled:
And Venus to the Loves around
Remark'd how ill we all dissembled.

M. Prior

174

LOVE'S SECRET

Never seek to tell thy love,
Love that never told can be;
For the gentle wind doth move
Silently, invisibly.

I told my love, I told my love,
  I told her all my heart,
Trembling, cold, in ghastly fears:—
  Ah! she did depart.

Soon after she was gone from me
  A traveller came by,
Silently, invisibly:
  He took her with a sigh.

W. Blake

175

When lovely woman stoops to folly
And finds too late that men betray,—
What charm can soothe her melancholy,
What art can wash her guilt away?

The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover
And wring his bosom, is—to die.

O. Goldsmith

176

Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon
  How can ye blume sae fair!
How can ye chant, ye little birds,
  And I sae fu' o' care!

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonnie bird
  That sings upon the bough;
Thou minds me o' the happy days
  When my fause Luve was true.

Thou'll break my heart, thou bonnie bird
  That sings beside thy mate;
For sae I sat, and sae I sang,
  And wist na o' my fate.

Aft hae I roved by bonnie Doon
To see the woodbine twine,
And ilka bird sang o' its love;
And sae did I o' mine.

Wi' lightsome heart I pu'd a rose,
Frae aff its thorny tree;
And my fause luver staw the rose,
But left the thorn wi' me.

R. Burns

177

THE PROGRESS OF POESY

A Pindaric Ode

Awake, Aeolian lyre, awake,
And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take;
The laughing flowers that round them blow
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Thro' verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign;
Now rolling down the steep amain
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour:
The rocks and nodding groves re-bellow to the roar.

Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen Cares
And frantic Passions hear thy soft controul.
On Thracia's hills the Lord of War
Has curb'd the fury of his car
And dropt his thirsty lance at thy command.
Perching on the sceptred hand

Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
With ruffled plumes, and flagging wing:
Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey
Temper'd to thy warbled lay.
O'er Idalia's velvet-green
The rosy-crownéd Loves are seen
On Cytherea's day;
With antic Sport, and blue-eyed Pleasures,
Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating
Glance their many-twinkling feet.
Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare:
Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay:
With arms sublime that float upon the air
In gliding state she wins her easy way:
O'er her warm cheek and rising bosom move
The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.

Man's feeble race what ills await!
Labour and Penury, the racks of Pain,
Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
And Death, sad refuge from the storms of fate!
The fond complaint, my song, disprove,
And justify the laws of Jove.
Say, has he given in vain the heavenly Muse?
Night, and all her sickly dews,
Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry
He gives to range the dreary sky:
Till down the eastern cliffs afar
Hyperion's march they spy, and glittering shafts of war.

In climes beyond the solar road
Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
The Muse has broke the twilight gloom
To cheer the shivering native's dull abode.

And oft, beneath the odorous shade
Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat
In loose numbers wildly sweet
Their feather-cinctured chiefs, and dusky loves.
Her track, where'er the goddess roves,
Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
Th' unconquerable Mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
Isles, that crown th' Aegean deep,
Fields that cool Ilissus laves,
Or where Maeander's amber waves
In lingering labyrinths creep,
How do your tuneful echoes languish
Mute, but to the voice of anguish!
Where each old poetic mountain
  Inspiration breathed around;
Every shade and hallow'd fountain
  Murmur'd deep a solemn sound:
Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour
  Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant Power,
  And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.
When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
They sought, oh Albion! next, thy sea-encircled coast.

  Far from the sun and summer-gale
In thy green lap was Nature's Darling laid,
What time, where lucid Avon stray'd,
  To him the mighty Mother did unveil
Her awful face: the dauntless child
Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smiled.
'This pencil take' (she said), 'whose colours clear
Richly paint the vernal year;
Thine, too, these golden keys, immortal Boy!
This can unlock the gates of joy;
Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears.'

Nor second He, that rode sublime
Upon the seraph-wings of Extasy
The secrets of the abyss to spy:
He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and time:
The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze
Where angels tremble while they gaze,
He saw; but blasted with excess of light,
Closed his eyes in endless night.
Behold where Dryden's less presumptuous car
Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
Two coursers of ethereal race,
With necks in thunder clothed, and long-resounding pace.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-eyed Fancy, hovering o'er,
Scatters from her pictured urn
Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.
But ah! 'tis heard no more—
Oh! lyre divine, what daring spirit
Wakes thee now? Tho' he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
That the Theban eagle bear,
Sailing with supreme dominion
Thro' the azure deep of air:
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the sun:
Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate:
Beneath the Good how far—but far above the Great.

T. Gray

178

THE PASSIONS

An Ode for Music

When Music, heavenly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Throng'd around her magic cell
Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
Possest beyond the Muse's painting;
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturb'd, delighted, raised, refined:
'Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatch'd her instruments of sound,
And, as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each (for Madness ruled the hour)
Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
  Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
  E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rush'd, his eyes on fire,
  In lightnings, own'd his secret stings;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre
  And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair,
  Low sullen sounds, his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air,
  'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
  What was thy delighted measure?
Still it whisper'd promised pleasure
  And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!

Still would her touch the strain prolong;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale
She call'd on Echo still through all the song;
And, where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close;
And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair;—

And longer had she sung:—but with a frown
Revenge impatient rose:
He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder down;
And with a withering look
The war-denouncing trumpet took
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe!
And ever and anon he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat;
And, though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
Dejected Pity at his side
Her soul-subduing voice applied,
Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mien,
While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fix'd:
Sad proof of thy distressful state!
Of differing themes the veering song was mix'd;
And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes up-raised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sat retired;
And from her wild sequester'd seat,
In notes of distance made more sweet,
Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive soul:
And dashing soft from rocks around
Bubbling runnels join'd the sound;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole,

Or, o'er some haunted stream, with fond delay,
Round an holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace, and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.

But O! how alter'd was its sprightlier tone
When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
Her bow across her shoulder flung,
Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
The hunter's call to Faun and Dryad known!
The oak-crown'd Sisters and their chaste-eyed Queen,
Satyrs and Sylvan Boys, were seen
Peeping from forth their alleys green:
Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear;
And Sport leapt up, and seized his beechen spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial:
He, with viny crown advancing,
First to the lively pipe his hand addrest:
But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol
Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best:
They would have thought who heard the strain
They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native maids
Amidst the festal-sounding shades
To some unwearied minstrel dancing;
While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings,
Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round:
Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound;
And he, amidst his frolic play,
As if he would the charming air repay,
Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.

O Music! sphere-descended maid,
Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid!
Why, goddess! why, to us denied,
Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
As in that loved Athenian bower
You learn'd an all-commanding power,

Thy mimic soul, O Nymph endear'd,
Can well recall what then it heard.
Where is thy native simple heart
Devote to Virtue, Fancy, Art?
Arise, as in that elder time,
Warm, energic, chaste, sublime!
Thy wonders, in that god-like age,
Fill thy recording Sister's page;—
'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age:
E'en all at once together found,
Cecilia's mingled world of sound:—
O bid our vain endeavours cease:
Revive the just designs of Greece:
Return in all thy simple state!
Confirm the tales her sons relate!

W. Collins

179

THE SONG OF DAVID

He sang of God, the mighty source
Of all things, the stupendous force
  On which all strength depends:
From Whose right arm, beneath Whose eyes,
All period, power, and enterprise
  Commences, reigns, and ends.

The world, the clustering spheres He made,
The glorious light, the soothing shade,
  Dale, champaign, grove and hill:
The multitudinous abyss,
Where secrecy remains in bliss,
  And wisdom hides her skill.

Tell them, I AM, Jehovah said
To Moses: while Earth heard in dread,
And, smitten to the heart,
At once, above, beneath, around,
All Nature, without voice or sound,
Replied, 'O Lord, THOU ART.'

C. Smart

180

INFANT JOY

'I have no name;
I am but two days old.'
—What shall I call thee?
'I happy am;
Joy is my name.'
—Sweet joy befall thee!

Pretty joy!
Sweet joy, but two days old;
Sweet joy I call thee:
Thou dost smile:
I sing the while,
Sweet joy befall thee!

W. Blake

181

A CRADLE SONG

Sleep, sleep, beauty bright,
Dreaming in the joys of night;
Sleep, sleep; in thy sleep
Little sorrows sit and weep

Sweet babe, in thy face
Soft desires I can trace,
Secret joys and secret smiles,
Little pretty infant wiles.

As thy softest limbs I feel,
Smiles as of the morning steal
O'er thy cheek, and o'er thy breast
Where thy little heart doth rest.

Oh the cunning wiles that creep
In thy little heart asleep!
When thy little heart doth wake,
Then the dreadful light shall break.

W. Blake

182

ODE ON THE SPRING

Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Fair Venus' train, appear,
Disclose the long-expecting flowers
And wake the purple year!
The Attic warbler pours her throat
Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
The untaught harmony of Spring:
While, whispering pleasure as they fly,
Cool Zephyrs thro' the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.

Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
A broader, browner shade,
Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'er-canopies the glade,
Beside some water's rushy brink
With me the Muse shall sit, and think
(At ease reclined in rustic state)
How vain the ardour of the crowd,
How low, how little are the proud,
How indigent the great!

Still is the toiling hand of Care;
The panting herds repose:
Yet hark, how thro' the peopled air
The busy murmur glows!

The insect-youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honied spring
And float amid the liquid noon:
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some show their gaily-gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the sun.

To Contemplation's sober eye
Such is the race of Man:
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.
Alike the Busy and the Gay
But flutter thro' life's little day,
In Fortune's varying colours drest:
Brush'd by the hand of rough Mischance,
Or chill'd by Age, their airy dance
They leave, in dust to rest.

Methinks I hear in accents low
The sportive kind reply:
Poor moralist! and what art thou?
A solitary fly!
Thy joys no glittering female meets,
No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
No painted plumage to display:
On hasty wings thy youth is flown;
Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone—
We frolic while 'tis May.

T. Gray

183

THE POPLAR FIELD

The poplars are fell'd; farewell to the shade
And the whispering sound of the cool colonnade;
The winds play no longer and sing in the leaves,
Nor Ouse on his bosom their image receives.

Twelve years have elapsed since I first took a view
Of my favourite field, and the bank where they grew:
And now in the grass behold they are laid,
And the tree is my seat that once lent me a shade!

The blackbird has fled to another retreat
Where the hazels afford him a screen from the heat;
And the scene where his melody charm'd me before
Resounds with his sweet-flowing ditty no more.

My fugitive years are all hasting away,
And I must ere long lie as lowly as they,
With a turf on my breast and a stone at my head,
Ere another such grove shall arise in its stead.

The change both my heart and my fancy employs;
I reflect on the frailty of man and his joys:
Short-lived as we are, yet our pleasures, we see,
Have a still shorter date, and die sooner than we.

W. Cowper

184

TO A MOUSE

On turning her up in her nest, with the plough, November, 1785

Wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie,
O what a panic's in thy breastie!
Thou need na start awa sae hasty,
Wi' bickering brattle!
I wad be laith to rin an' chase thee
Wi' murd'ring pattle!

I'm truly sorry man's dominion
Has broken Nature's social union,
An' justifies that ill opinion
Which makes thee startle
At me, thy poor earth-born companion,
An' fellow-mortal!

I doubt na, whiles, but thou may thieve;
What then? poor beastie, thou maun live!
A daimen-icker in a thrave
'S a sma' request:
I'll get a blessin' wi' the lave,
And never miss't!

Thy wee bit housie, too, in ruin!
Its silly wa's the win's are strewin:.
And naething, now, to big a new ane,
O' foggage green!
An' bleak December's winds ensuin'
Baith snell an' keen!

Thou saw the fields laid bare an' waste
An' weary winter comin' fast,
An' cozie here, beneath the blast,
Thou thought to dwell,
Till, crash! the cruel coulter past
Out thro' thy cell.

That wee bit heap o' leaves an' stibble
Has cost thee mony a weary nibble!
Now thou's turn'd out, for a' thy trouble,
But house or hald,
To thole the winter's sleety dribble
An' cranreuch cauld!

But, Mousie, thou art no thy lane
In proving foresight may be vain:
The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft a-gley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain,
For promised joy.

Still thou art blest, compared wi' me!
The present only toucheth thee:
But, Och! I backward cast my e'e
On prospects drear!
An' forward, tho' I canna see,
I guess an' fear!

R. Burns

185

A WISH

Mine be a cot beside the hill;
A bee-hive's hum shall soothe my ear;
A willowy brook that turns a mill,
With many a fall shall linger near.

The swallow, oft, beneath my thatch
Shall twitter from her clay-built nest;
Oft shall the pilgrim lift the latch,
And share my meal, a welcome guest.

Around my ivied porch shall spring
Each fragrant flower that drinks the dew;
And Lucy, at her wheel, shall sing
In russet-gown and apron blue.

The village-church among the trees,
Where first our marriage-vows were given,
With merry peals shall swell the breeze
And point with taper spire to Heaven.

S. Rogers

186

ODE TO EVENING

If aught of oaten stop or pastoral song
May hope, O pensive Eve, to soothe thine ear
Like thy own solemn springs,
Thy springs, and dying gales;

O Nymph reserved,—while now the bright-hair'd sun
Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
With brede ethereal wove,
O'erhang his wavy bed;

Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-eyed bat
With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern wing,
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises midst the twilight path,
Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum,—
Now teach me, maid composed,
To breathe some soften'd strain

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale,
May not unseemly with its stillness suit;
As, musing slow, I hail
Thy genial loved return.

For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant Hours, and Elves
Who slept in buds the day,

And many a Nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge
And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene;
Or find some ruin midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.

Or, if chill blustering winds or driving rain
Prevent my willing feet, be mine the hut
That, from the mountain's side,
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires;
And hears their simple bell; and marks o'er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

While Spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve!
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light;

While sallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves;
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train
And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, regardful of thy quiet rule,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, smiling Peace,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And love thy favourite name!

W. Collins

187

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCHYARD

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds:

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower
The moping owl does to the moon complain
Of such as, wandering near her secret bower,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade
Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing morn,
The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn
Or busy housewife ply her evening care:
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke;
How jocund did they drive their team afield!
How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike th' inevitable hour:—
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault
If memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise,
Where through the long-drawn aisle and fretted vault
The pealing anthem swells the note of praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
Hands, that the rod of empire might have sway'd,
Or waked to extasy the living lyre:

But knowledge to their eyes her ample page
Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll;
Chill penury repress'd their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden, that with dauntless breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood,
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell, guiltless of his country's blood.

Th' applause of listening senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their history in a nation's eyes

Their lot forbad: nor circumscribed alone
Their growing virtues, but their crimes confined;
Forbad to wade thro' slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind;

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to hide,
To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
Or heap the shrine of luxury and pride
With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray;
Along the cool sequester'd vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenour of their way.

Yet e'en these bones from insult to protect
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture deck'd,
Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unletter'd Muse,
The place of fame and elegy supply:
And many a holy text around she strews,
That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb forgetfulness a prey,
This pleasing anxious being e'er resign'd,
Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
Nor cast one longing lingering look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
E'en from the tomb the voice of nature cries,
E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires.

For thee, who, mindful of th' unhonour'd dead,
Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
Some kindred spirit shall enquire thy fate,—

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
'Oft have we seen him at the peep of dawn
Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
To meet the sun upon the upland lawn;

'There at the foot of yonder nodding beech
That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
His listless length at noon-tide would he stretch,
And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

'Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn,
Muttering his wayward fancies he would rove;
Now drooping, woeful-wan, like one forlorn,
Or crazed with care, or cross'd in hopeless love.

'One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill,
Along the heath, and near his favourite tree;
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

'The next with dirges due in sad array
Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne,—
Approach and read (for thou canst read) the lay
Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn.'

THE EPITAPH

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
A youth, to fortune and to fame unknown;
Fair science frown'd not on his humble birth
And melancholy mark'd him for her own.

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere;
Heaven did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to misery (all he had) a tear,
He gain'd from Heaven ('twas all he wish'd) a friend.

No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
(There they alike in trembling hope repose,)
The bosom of his Father and his God.

T. Gray

188

MARY MORISON

O Mary, at thy window be,
It is the wish'd, the trysted hour!
Those smiles and glances let me see
That make the miser's treasure poor:
How blithely wad I bide the stoure,
A weary slave frae sun to sun,
Could I the rich reward secure,
The lovely Mary Morison.

Yestreen when to the trembling string
The dance gaed thro' the lighted ha',
To thee my fancy took its wing,—
I sat, but neither heard nor saw:
Tho' this was fair, and that was braw,
And yon the toast of a' the town,
I sigh'd, and said amang them a',
'Ye are na Mary Morison.'

O Mary, canst thou wreck his peace
Wha for thy sake wad gladly dee?
Or canst thou break that heart of his,
Whase only faut is loving thee?
If love for love thou wilt na gie,
At least be pity to me shown;
A thought ungentle canna be
The thought o' Mary Morison.

R. Burns

189

BONNIE LESLEY

O saw ye bonnie Lesley
As she gaed o'er the border?
She's gane, like Alexander,
To spread her conquests farther.

To see her is to love her,
And love but her for ever;
For Nature made her what she is,
And ne'er made sic anither!

Thou art a queen, Fair Lesley,
Thy subjects we, before thee;
Thou art divine, Fair Lesley,
The hearts o' men adore thee.

The Deil he could na scaith thee,
Or aught that wad belang thee;
He'd look into thy bonnie face,
And say 'I canna wrang thee!'

The Powers aboon will tent thee;
Misfortune sha' na steer thee;
Thou'rt like themselves sae lovely
That ill they'll ne'er let near thee.

Return again, Fair Lesley,
Return to Caledonie!
That we may brag we hae a lass
There's nane again sae bonnie.

R. Burns

190

O my Luve's like a red, red rose
That's newly sprung in June;
O my Luve's like the melodie
That's sweetly play'd in tune.

As fair art thou, my bonnie lass,
So deep in luve am I:
And I will luve thee still, my dear,
Till a' the seas gang dry:

Till a' the seas gang dry, my dear,
And the rocks melt wi' the sun;
I will luve thee still, my dear,
While the sands o' life shall run.

And fare thee weel, my only Luve!
And fare thee weel awhile!
And I will come again, my Luve,
Tho' it were ten thousand mile.

R. Burns

191

HIGHLAND MARY

Ye banks and braes and streams around
The castle o' Montgomery,
Green be your woods, and fair your flowers,
Your waters never drumlie!
There simmer first unfauld her robes,
And there the langest tarry;
For there I took the last fareweel
O' my sweet Highland Mary.

How sweetly bloom'd the gay green birk,
  How rich the hawthorn's blossom,
As underneath their fragrant shade
  I clasp'd her to my bosom!
The golden hours on angel wings
  Flew o'er me and my dearie;
For dear to me as light and life
  Was my sweet Highland Mary.

Wi' mony a vow and lock'd embrace
  Our parting was fu' tender;
And pledging aft to meet again,
  We tore oursels asunder;
But, Oh! fell Death's untimely frost,
  That nipt my flower sae early!
Now green's the sod, and cauld's the clay,
  That wraps my Highland Mary.

O pale, pale now, those rosy lips,
  I aft hae kiss'd sae fondly;
And closed for aye the sparkling glance
  That dwelt on me sae kindly;
And mouldering now in silent dust
  That heart that lo'ed me dearly!
But still within my bosom's core
  Shall live my Highland Mary.

R. Burns

192

AULD ROBIN GRAY

When the sheep are in the fauld, and the kye at hame,
And a' the world to rest are gane,
The waes o' my heart fa' in showers frae my e'e,
While my gudeman lies sound by me.

Young Jamie lo'ed me weel, and sought me for his bride;
But saving a croun he had naething else beside:
To make the croun a pund, young Jamie gaed to sea;
And the croun and the pund were baith for me.

He hadna been awa' a week but only twa,
When my father brak his arm, and the cow was stown awa;
My mother she fell sick, and my Jamie at the sea—
And auld Robin Gray came a-courtin' me.

My father couldna work, and my mother couldna spin;
I toil'd day and night, but their bread I couldna win;
Auld Rob maintain'd them baith, and wi' tears in his e'e
Said, Jennie, for their sakes, O, marry me!

My heart it said nay; I look'd for Jamie back;
But the wind it blew high, and the ship it was a wrack;
His ship it was a wrack—why didna Jamie dee?
Or why do I live to cry, Wae's me?

My father urgit sair: my mother didna speak;
But she look'd in my face till my heart was like to break;
They gi'ed him my hand, but my heart was at the sea;
Sae auld Robin Gray he was gudeman to me.

I hadna been a wife a week but only four,
When mournfu' as I sat on the stane at the door,
I saw my Jamie's wraith, for I couldna think it he—
Till he said, I'm come hame to marry thee.

O sair, sair did we greet, and muckle did we say;
We took but ae kiss, and I bad him gang away:
I wish that I were dead, but I'm no like to dee;
And why was I born to say, Wae's me!

I gang like a ghaist, and I carena to spin;
I daurna think on Jamie, for that wad be a sin;
But I'll do my best a gude wife aye to be,
For auld Robin Gray he is kind unto me.

Lady A. Lindsay

193

DUNCAN GRAY

Duncan Gray cam here to woo,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't;
On blythe Yule night when we were fou,
Ha, ha, the wooing o't:
Maggie coost her head fu' high,
Look'd asklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh;
Ha, ha, the wooing o't!

Duncan fleech'd, and Duncan pray'd;
Meg was deaf as Ailsa Craig;
Duncan sigh'd baith out and in,
Grat his een baith bleer't and blin',
Spak o' lowpin ower a linn!

Time and chance are but a tide,
Slighted love is sair to bide;
Shall I, like a fool, quoth he,
For a haughty hizzie dee?
She may gae to—France for me!

How it comes let doctors tell,
Meg grew sick—as he grew well;
Something in her bosom wrings,
For relief a sigh she brings;
And, O her een, they spak sic things!

Duncan was a lad o' grace;
Maggie's was a piteous case;
Duncan couldna be her death,
Swelling pity smoor'd his wrath;
Now they're crouse and canty baith:
Ha, ha, the wooing o't!

R. Burns

194

THE SAILOR'S WIFE

And are ye sure the news is true?
And are ye sure he's weel?
Is this the time to think o' wark?
Ye jades, lay by your wheel;
Is this the time to spin a thread,
When Colin's at the door?
Reach down my cloak, I'll to the quay,
And see him come ashore.
For there's nae luck about the house,
There's nae luck at a';
There's little pleasure in the house
When our gudeman's awa'.

And gie to me my bigonet,
My bishop's satin gown;
For I maun tell the baillie's wife
That Colin's in the town.
My Turkey slippers maun gae on,
My stockins pearly blue;
It's a' to pleasure our gudeman,
For he's baith leal and true.

Rise, lass, and mak a clean fireside,
Put on the muckle pot;
Gie little Kate her button gown
And Jock his Sunday coat;

And mak their shoon as black as slaes,
  Their hose as white as snaw;
It's a' to please my ain gudeman,
  For he's been long awa.

There's twa fat hens upo' the coop
  Been fed this month and mair;
Mak haste and thraw their necks about,
  That Colin weel may fare;
And spread the table neat and clean,
  Gar ilka thing look braw,
For wha can tell how Colin fared
  When he was far awa?

Sae true his heart, sae smooth his speech,
  His breath like caller air;
His very foot has music in't
  As he comes up the stair—
And will I see his face again?
  And will I hear him speak?
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought,
  In troth I'm like to greet!

If Colin's weel, and weel content,
  I hae nae mair to crave:
And gin I live to keep him sae,
  I'm blest aboon the lave:
And will I see his face again,
  And will I hear him speak?
I'm downright dizzy wi' the thought,
  In troth I'm like to greet.
For there's nae luck about the house,
  There's nae luck at a';
There's little pleasure in the house
  When our gudeman's awa'.

W. J. Mickle

195

ABSENCE

When I think on the happy days
I spent wi' you, my dearie;
And now what lands between us lie,
How can I be but eerie!

How slow ye move, ye heavy hours,
As ye were wae and weary!
It was na sae ye glinted by
When I was wi' my dearie.

Anon.

196

JEAN

Of a' the airts the wind can blaw
I dearly like the West,
For there the bonnie lassie lives,
The lassie I lo'e best:
There wild woods grow, and rivers row,
And mony a hill between;
But day and night my fancy's flight
Is ever wi' my Jean.

I see her in the dewy flowers,
I see her sweet and fair:
I hear her in the tunefu' birds,
I hear her charm the air:
There's not a bonnie flower that springs
By fountain, shaw, or green,
There's not a bonnie bird that sings
But minds me o' my Jean.

O blaw ye westlin winds, blaw saft
Amang the leafy trees;
Wi' balmy gale, frae hill and dale
Bring hame the laden bees;

And bring the lassie back to me
That's aye sae neat and clean;
Ae smile o' her wad banish care,
Sae charming is my Jean.

What sighs and vows amang the knowes
Hae pass'd atween us twa!
How fond to meet, how wae to part
That night she gaed awa!
The Powers aboon can only ken
To whom the heart is seen,
That nane can be sae dear to me
As my sweet lovely Jean!

R. Burns

197

JOHN ANDERSON

John Anderson my jo, John,
When we were first acquent
Your locks were like the raven,
Your bonnie brow was brent;
But now your brow is bald, John,
Your locks are like the snow;
But blessings on your frosty pow,
John Anderson my jo.

John Anderson my jo, John,
We clamb the hill thegither,
And mony a canty day, John,
We've had wi' ane anither:
Now we maun totter down, John,
But hand in hand we'll go,
And sleep thegither at the foot,
John Anderson my jo.

R. Burns

198

THE LAND O' THE LEAL

I'm wearing awa', Jean,
Like snaw when its thaw, Jean,
I'm wearing awa'
To the land o' the leal.
There's nae sorrow there, Jean,
There's neither cauld nor care, Jean,
The day is aye fair
In the land o' the leal.

Ye were aye leal and true, Jean
Your task's ended noo, Jean,
And I'll welcome you
To the land o' the leal.
Our bonnie bairn's there, Jean,
She was baith guid and fair, Jean;
O we grudged her right sair
To the land o' the leal!

Then dry that tearfu' e'e, Jean,
My soul langs to be free, Jean,
And angels wait on me
To the land o' the leal.
Now fare ye weel, my ain Jean,
This warld's care is vain, Jean;
We'll meet and aye be fain
In the land o' the leal!

Lady Nairn

199

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers
That crown the watery glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade;

And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way;

Ah happy hills, ah pleasing shade!
Ah fields beloved in vain!
Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales that from ye blow
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing
My weary soul they seem to soothe,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breath a second spring.

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race
Disporting on thy margent green
The paths of pleasure trace;
Who foremost now delight to cleave
With pliant arm, thy glassy wave?
The captive linnet which enthral?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed
Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent
Their murmuring labours ply
'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
To sweeten liberty:
Some bold adventurers disdain
The limits of their little reign
And unknown regions dare descry:
Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in every wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
  Less pleasing when possest;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
  The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue,
Wild wit, invention ever new,
And lively cheer, of vigour born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
  That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas! regardless of their doom
  The little victims play;
No sense have they of ills to come
  Nor care beyond to-day:
Yet see how all around 'em wait
The ministers of human fate
And black Misfortune's baleful train!
Ah show them where in ambush stand
To seize their prey, the murderous band!
  Ah, tell them they are men!

These shall the fury Passions tear,
  The vultures of the mind,
Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
  And Shame that sculks behind;
Or pining Love shall waste their youth,
Or Jealousy with rankling tooth
That inly gnaws the secret heart,
And Envy wan, and faded Care,
Grim-visaged comfortless Despair,
  And Sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
  Then whirl the wretch from high
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice
  And grinning Infamy.
The stings of Falsehood those shall try
And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,

That mocks the tear it forced to flow;
And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
And moody Madness laughing wild
  Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
  A griesly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
  More hideous than their queen:
This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
That every labouring sinew strains,
Those in the deeper vitals rage:
Lo! Poverty, to fill the band,
That numbs the soul with icy hand,
  And slow-consuming Age.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
  Condemn'd alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain;
  Th' unfeeling for his own.
Yet, ah! why should they know their fate,
Since sorrow never comes too late,
And happiness too swiftly flies?
Thought would destroy their paradise.
No more;—where ignorance is bliss,
  'Tis folly to be wise.

T. Gray

200

THE SHRUBBERY

O happy shades! to me unblest!
  Friendly to peace, but not to me!
How ill the scene that offers rest,
  And heart that cannot rest, agree!

This glassy stream, that spreading pine,
  Those alders quivering to the breeze,
Might soothe a soul less hurt than mine,
  And please, if anything could please.

But fix'd unalterable Care
Foregoes not what she feels within,
Shows the same sadness everywhere,
And slights the season and the scene.

For all that pleased in wood or lawn
While Peace possess'd these silent bowers,
Her animating smile withdrawn,
Has lost its beauties and its powers.

The saint or moralist should tread
This moss-grown alley, musing, slow,
They seek like me the secret shade,
But not, like me, to nourish woe!

Me, fruitful scenes and prospects waste
Alike admonish not to roam;
These tell me of enjoyments past,
And those of sorrows yet to come.

W. Cowper

201

HYMN TO ADVERSITY

Daughter of Jove, relentless power,
Thou tamer of the human breast,
Whose iron scourge and torturing hour
The bad affright, afflict the best!
Bound in thy adamantine chain
The proud are taught to taste of pain,
And purple tyrants vainly groan
With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy Sire to send on earth
Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
To thee he gave the heavenly birth
And bade to form her infant mind.
Stern, rugged nurse! thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore;
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scared at thy frown terrific, fly
  Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
  And leave us leisure to be good.
Light they disperse, and with them go
The summer friend, the flattering foe;
By vain Prosperity received,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believed.

Wisdom in sable garb array'd
  Immersed in rapturous thought profound,
And Melancholy, silent maid,
  With leaden eye, that loves the ground,
Still on thy solemn steps attend:
Warm Charity, the general friend,
With Justice, to herself severe,
And Pity dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh! gently on thy suppliant's head
  Dread goddess, lay thy chastening hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
  Not circled wth the vengeful band
(As by the impious thou art seen)
With thundering voice, and threatening mien,
With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty:—

Thy form benign, oh goddess, wear,
  Thy milder influence impart,
Thy philosophic train be there
  To soften, not to wound my heart.
The generous spark extinct revive,
Teach me to love and to forgive,
Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are to feel, and know myself a Man.

T. Gray

202

THE SOLITUDE OF ALEXANDER SELKIRK

I am monarch of all I survey;
My right there is none to dispute;
From the centre all round to the sea
I am lord of the fowl and the brute.
O Solitude! where are the charms
That sages have seen in thy face?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms,
Than reign in this horrible place.

I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech;
I start at the sound of my own.
The beasts that roam over the plain
My form with indifference see;
They are so unacquainted with man,
Their tameness is shocking to me.

Society, Friendship, and Love
Divinely bestow'd upon man,
Oh, had I the wings of a dove
How soon would I taste you again!
My sorrows I then might assuage
In the ways of religion and truth,
Might learn from the wisdom of age,
And be cheer'd by the sallies of youth.

Ye winds that have made me your sport,
Convey to this desolate shore
Some cordial endearing report
Of a land I shall visit no more:
My friends, do they now and then send
A wish or a thought after me?
O tell me I yet have a friend,
Though a friend I am never to see.

How fleet is a glance of the mind!
Compared with the speed of its flight,
The tempest itself lags behind,
And the swift-wingéd arrows of light.
When I think of my own native land
In a moment I seem to be there;
But alas! recollection at hand
Soon hurries me back to despair.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
The beast is laid down in his lair;
Even here is a season of rest,
And I to my cabin repair.
There's mercy in every place,
And mercy, encouraging thought!
Gives even affliction a grace
And reconciles man to his lot.

W. Cowper

203

TO MARY UNWIN

Mary! I want a lyre with other strings,
Such aid from Heaven as some have feign'd they drew,
An eloquence scarce given to mortals, new
And undebased by praise of meaner things,

That ere through age or woe I shed my wings
I may record thy worth with honour due,
In verse as musical as thou art true,
And that immortalizes whom it sings:—

But thou hast little need. There is a Book
By seraphs writ with beams of heavenly light,
On which the eyes of God not rarely look,

A chronicle of actions just and bright—
There all thy deeds, my faithful Mary, shine;
And since thou own'st that praise, I spare thee mine.

W. Cowper

204

TO THE SAME

The twentieth year is well-nigh past
Since first our sky was overcast;
Ah would that this might be the last!
My Mary!

Thy spirits have a fainter flow,
I see thee daily weaker grow—
'Twas my distress that brought thee low,
My Mary!

Thy needles, once a shining store,
For my sake restless heretofore,
Now rust disused, and shine no more;
My Mary!

For though thou gladly wouldst fulfil
The same kind office for me still,
Thy sight now seconds not thy will,
My Mary!

But well thou play'dst the housewife's part,
And all thy threads with magic art
Have wound themselves about this heart,
My Mary!

Thy indistinct expressions seem
Like language utter'd in a dream;
Yet me they charm, whate'er the theme,
My Mary!

Thy silver locks, once auburn bright,
Are still more lovely in my sight
Than golden beams of orient light,
My Mary!

For could I view nor them nor thee,
What sight worth seeing could I see?
The sun would rise in vain for me,
My Mary!

Partakers of thy sad decline
Thy hands their little force resign;
Yet, gently prest, press gently mine,
My Mary!

Such feebleness of limbs thou prov'st
That now at every step thou mov'st
Upheld by two; yet still thou lov'st,
My Mary!

And still to love, though prest with ill,
In wintry age to feel no chill,
With me is to be lovely still,
My Mary!

But ah! by constant heed I know
How oft the sadness that I show
Transforms thy smiles to looks of woe,
My Mary!

And should my future lot be cast
With much resemblance of the past,
Thy worn-out heart will break at last—
My Mary!

W. Cowper

205

THE CASTAWAY

Obscurest night involved the sky
The Atlantic billows roar'd,
When such a destined wretch as I,
Wash'd headlong from on board,
Of friends, of hope, of all bereft,
His floating home for ever left.

No braver chief could Albion boast
Than he with whom he went,
Nor ever ship left Albion's coast
With warmer wishes sent.
He loved them both, but both in vain,
Nor him beheld, nor her again.

Not long beneath the whelming brine,
Expert to swim, he lay;
Nor soon he felt his strength decline,
Or courage die away;
But waged with death a lasting strife,
Supported by despair of life.

He shouted: nor his friends had fail'd
To check the vessel's course,
But so the furious blast prevail'd,
That, pitiless perforce,
They left their outcast mate behind,
And scudded still before the wind.

Some succour yet they could afford;
And such as storms allow,
The cask, the coop, the floated cord,
Delay'd not to bestow.
But he (they knew) nor ship nor shore,
Whate'er they gave, should visit more.

Nor, cruel as it seem'd, could he
Their haste himself condemn,
Aware that flight, in such a sea,
Alone could rescue them;
Yet bitter felt it still to die
Deserted, and his friends so nigh.

He long survives, who lives an hour
In ocean, self-upheld;
And so long he, with unspent power,
His destiny repell'd;
And ever, as the minutes flew,
Entreated help, or cried 'Adieu!'

At length, his transient respite past,
  His comrades, who before
Had heard his voice in every blast,
  Could catch the sound no more;
For then, by toil subdued, he drank
The stifling wave, and then he sank.

No poet wept him; but the page
  Of narrative sincere,
That tells his name, his worth, his age,
  Is wet with Anson's tear:
And tears by bards or heroes shed
Alike immortalize the dead.

I therefore purpose not, or dream,
  Descanting on his fate,
To give the melancholy theme
  A more enduring date:
But misery still delights to trace
Its semblance in another's case.

No voice divine the storm allay'd,
  No light propitious shone,
When, snatch'd from all effectual aid,
  We perish'd, each alone:
But I beneath a rougher sea,
And whelm'd in deeper gulfs than he.

W. Cowper

206

TOMORROW

In the downhill of life, when I find I'm declining,
  May my fate no less fortunate be
Than a snug elbow-chair will afford for reclining,
  And a cot that o'erlooks the wide sea;
With an ambling pad-pony to pace o'er the lawn,
  While I carol away idle sorrow,
And blithe as the lark that each day hails the dawn
  Look forward with hope for Tomorrow.

With a porch at my door, both for shelter and shade too,
As the sunshine or rain may prevail;
And a small spot of ground for the use of the spade too,
With a barn for the use of the flail:
A cow for my dairy, a dog for my game,
And a purse when a friend wants to borrow;
I'll envy no Nabob his riches or fame,
Or what honours may wait him Tomorrow.

From the bleak northern blast may my cot be completely
Secured by a neighbouring hill;
And at night may repose steal upon me more sweetly
By the sound of a murmuring rill:
And while peace and plenty I find at my board,
With a heart free from sickness and sorrow,
With my friends may I share what Today may afford,
And let them spread the table Tomorrow.

And when I at last must throw off this frail cov'ring
Which I've worn for three-score years and ten,
On the brink of the grave I'll not seek to keep hov'ring,
Nor my thread wish to spin o'er again:
But my face in the glass I'll serenely survey,
And with smiles count each wrinkle and furrow;
As this old worn-out stuff, which is threadbare Today,
May become Everlasting Tomorrow.

J. Collins

207

Life! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met
I own to me's a secret yet.

Life! we've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear—
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
—Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not Good Night,—but in some brighter clime
Bid me Good Morning.

A. L. Barbauld

208

TO THE MUSES

Whether on Ida's shady brow,
Or in the chambers of the East,
The chambers of the sun, that now
From ancient melody have ceased;

Whether in Heaven ye wander fair,
Or the green corners of the earth,
Or the blue regions of the air,
Where the melodious winds have birth;

Whether on crystal rocks ye rove
Beneath the bosom of the sea,
Wandering in many a coral grove,—
Fair Nine, forsaking Poetry;

How have you left the ancient love
That bards of old enjoy'd in you!
The languid strings do scarcely move,
The sound is forced, the notes are few.

W. Blake

209

ODE ON THE POETS

Bards of Passion and of Mirth
Ye have left your souls on earth!
Have ye souls in heaven too,
Double-lived in regions new?

—Yes, and those of heaven commune
With the spheres of sun and moon;
With the noise of fountains wond'rous
And the parle of voices thund'rous;
With the whisper of heaven's trees
And one another, in soft ease
Seated on Elysian lawns
Browsed by none but Dian's fawns;
Underneath large blue-bells tented,
Where the daisies are rose-scented,
And the rose herself has got Perfume which on earth is not;
Where the nightingale doth sing
Not a senseless, trancéd thing,
But divine melodious truth;
Philosophic numbers smooth;
Tales and golden histories
Of heaven and its mysteries.

Thus ye live on high, and then
On the earth ye live again;
And the souls ye left behind you
Teach us, here, the way to find you,
Where your other souls are joying,
Never slumber'd, never cloying.
Here, your earth-born souls still speak
To mortals, of their little week;
Of their sorrows and delights;
Of their passions and their spites;
Of their glory and their shame;
What doth strengthen and what maim:—
Thus ye teach us, every day,
Wisdom, though fled far away.

Bards of Passion and of Mirth
Ye have left your souls on earth!
Ye have souls in heaven too,
Double-lived in regions new!

J. Keats

210

ON FIRST LOOKING INTO CHAPMAN'S HOMER

Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty to Apollo hold.

Oft of one wide expanse had I been told
That deep-brow'd Homer ruled as his demesne:
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene
Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:

—Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken;
Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes

He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

J. Keats

211

LOVE

All thoughts, all passions, all delights,
Whatever stirs this mortal frame,
All are but ministers of Love,
And feed his sacred flame.

Oft in my waking dreams do I
Live o'er again that happy hour,
When mid-way on the mount I lay,
Beside the ruin'd tower.

The moonshine stealing o'er the scene
Had blended with the lights of eve;
And she was there, my hope, my joy,
My own dear Genevieve!

She lean'd against the arméd man,
The statue of the arméd knight;
She stood and listen'd to my lay;
Amid the lingering light.

Few sorrows hath she of her own,
My hope! my joy! my Genevieve!
She loves me best, whene'er I sing
The songs that make her grieve.

I play'd a soft and doleful air,
I sang an old and moving story—
An old rude song, that suited well
That ruin wild and hoary.

She listen'd with a flitting blush,
With downcast eyes and modest grace;
For well she knew, I could not choose
But gaze upon her face.

I told her of the Knight that wore
Upon his shield a burning brand;
And that for ten long years he woo'd
The Lady of the Land.

I told her how he pined: and ah!
The deep, the low, the pleading tone
With which I sang another's love
Interpreted my own.

She listen'd with a flitting blush,
With downcast eyes, and modest grace;
And she forgave me, that I gazed
Too fondly on her face!

But when I told the cruel scorn
That crazed that bold and lovely Knight,
And that he cross'd the mountain-woods,
Nor rested day nor night;

That sometimes from the savage den,
And sometimes from the darksome shade,
And sometimes starting up at once
In green and sunny glade,—

There came and look'd him in the face
An angel beautiful and bright;
And that he knew it was a Fiend,
This miserable Knight!

And that unknowing what he did,
He leap'd amid a murderous band,
And saved from outrage worse than death
The Lady of the Land;—

And how she wept, and clasp'd his knees;
And how she tended him in vain—
And ever strove to expiate
The scorn that crazed his brain;—

And that she nursed him in a cave,
And how his madness went away,
When on the yellow forest-leaves
A dying man he lay;—

His dying words—but when I reach'd
That tenderest strain of all the ditty,
My faltering voice and pausing harp
Disturb'd her soul with pity!

All impulses of soul and sense
Had thrill'd my guileless Genevieve;
The music and the doleful tale,
The rich and balmy eve;

And hopes, and fears that kindly hope,
An undistinguishable throng,
And gentle wishes long subdued,
Subdued and cherish'd long!

She wept with pity and delight,
She blush'd with love, and virgin shame;
And like the murmur of a dream,
I heard her breathe my name.

Her bosom heaved—she stepp'd aside,
As conscious of my look she stept—
Then suddenly, with timorous eye
She fled to me and wept.

She half inclosed me with her arms,
She press'd me with a meek embrace;
And bending back her head, look'd up,
And gazed upon my face.

'Twas partly love, and partly fear,
And partly 'twas a bashful art
That I might rather feel, than see,
The swelling of her heart.

I calm'd her fears, and she was calm,
And told her love with virgin pride;
And so I won my Genevieve,
My bright and beauteous Bride.

S. T. Coleridge

212

ALL FOR LOVE

O talk not to me of a name great in story;
The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty.

What are garlands and crowns to the brow that is wrinkled?
'Tis but as a dead flower with May-dew besprinkled;
Then away with all such from the head that is hoary—
What care I for the wreaths that can only give glory?

Oh Fame!—if I e'er took delight in thy praises,
'Twas less for the sake of thy high-sounding phrases,
Than to see the bright eyes of the dear one discover
She thought that I was not unworthy to love her.

There chiefly I sought thee, there only I found thee!
Her glance was the best of the rays that surround thee;
When it sparkled o'er aught that was bright in my story,
I knew it was love, and I felt it was glory.

Lord Byron

213

THE OUTLAW

O Brignall banks are wild and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer-queen.
And as I rode by Dalton-Hall
Beneath the turrets high,
A Maiden on the castle-wall
Was singing merrily:
'O Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
Than reign our English queen.'

'If, Maiden, thou wouldst wend with me,
To leave both tower and town,
Thou first must guess what life lead we
That dwell by dale and down.
And if thou canst that riddle read,
As read full well you may,
Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed
As blithe as Queen of May.'

Yet sung she, 'Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
Than reign our English queen.

'I read you, by your bugle-horn
And by your palfrey good,
I read you for a ranger sworn
To keep the king's greenwood.'
'A Ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light;
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night.'
Yet sung she, 'Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay;
I would I were with Edmund there
To reign his Queen of May!

'With burnish'd brand and musketoon
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold Dragoon
That lists the tuck of drum.'
'I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear;
But when the beetle sounds his hum
My comrades take the spear.
And O! though Brignall banks be fair
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare
Would reign my Queen of May!

'Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die;
The fiend whose lantern lights the mead
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met
Beneath the greenwood bough,—
What once we were we all forget,
Nor think what we are now.'

Chorus

'Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer-queen.'

Sir W. Scott

214

There be none of Beauty's daughters
With a magic like Thee;
And like music on the waters
Is thy sweet voice to me:
When, as if its sound were causing
The charmed ocean's pausing,
The waves lie still and gleaming,
And the lull'd winds seem dreaming:

And the midnight moon is weaving
Her bright chain o'er the deep,
Whose breast is gently heaving
As an infant's asleep:
So the spirit bows before thee
To listen and adore thee;
With a full but soft emotion,
Like the swell of Summer's ocean.

Lord Byron

215

THE INDIAN SERENADE

I arise from dreams of Thee
In the first sweet sleep of night,
When the winds are breathing low
And the stars are shining bright:
I arise from dreams of thee,
And a spirit in my feet
Hath led me—who knows how?
To thy chamber-window, Sweet!

The wandering airs they faint
On the dark, the silent stream—
The champak odours fail
Like sweet thoughts in a dream;
The nightingale's complaint
It dies upon her heart,
As I must die on thine
O belovéd as thou art!

Oh lift me from the grass!
I die, I faint, I fail!
Let thy love in kisses rain
On my lips and eyelids pale.
My cheek is cold and white, alas!
My heart beats loud and fast;
Oh! press it close to thine again
Where it will break at last.

P. B. Shelley

216

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies,
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meet in her aspect and her eyes;
Thus mellow'd to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impair'd the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress
Or softly lightens o'er her face,
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear their dwelling-place.

And on that cheek and o'er that brow
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow
But tell of days in goodness spent,—
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent.

Lord Byron

217

She was a Phantom of delight
When first she gleam'd upon my sight;
A lovely Apparition, sent
To be a moment's ornament;
Her eyes as stars of twilight fair;
Like Twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
But all things else about her drawn
From May-time and the cheerful dawn;
A dancing shape, an image gay,
To haunt, to startle, and waylay.

I saw her upon nearer view,
A Spirit, yet a Woman too!
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin-liberty;
A countenance in which did meet
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food,
For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.

And now I see with eye serene
The very pulse of the machine;
A being breathing thoughtful breath,
A traveller between life and death:
The reason firm, the temperate will,
Endurance, foresight, strength, and skill;

A perfect Woman, nobly plann'd
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a Spirit still, and bright
With something of an angel-light.

W. Wordsworth

218

She is not fair to outward view
  As many maidens be;
Her loveliness I never knew
  Until she smiled on me.
O then I saw her eye was bright,
A well of love, a spring of light.

But now her looks are coy and cold,
  To mine they ne'er reply,
And yet I cease not to behold
  The love-light in her eye:
Her very frowns are fairer far
Than smiles of other maidens are.

H. Coleridge

219

I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden;
Thou needest not fear mine;
My spirit is too deeply laden
Ever to burthen thine.

I fear thy mien, thy tones, thy motion;
Thou needest not fear mine;
Innocent is the heart's devotion
With which I worship thine.

P. B. Shelley

220

She dwelt among the untrodden ways
  Beside the springs of Dove;
A maid whom there were none to praise,
  And very few to love.

A violet by a mossy stone
  Half-hidden from the eye!
—Fair as a star, when only one
  Is shining in the sky.

She lived unknown, and few could know
  When Lucy ceased to be;
But she is in her grave, and, oh,
  The difference to me!

W. Wordsworth

221

I travell'd among unknown men
  In lands beyond the sea;
Nor, England! did I know till then
  What love I bore to thee.

'Tis past, that melancholy dream!
  Nor will I quit thy shore
A second time; for still I seem
  To love thee more and more.

Among thy mountains did I feel
  The joy of my desire;
And she I cherished turn'd her wheel
  Beside an English fire.

Thy mornings show'd, thy nights conceal'd
  The bowers where Lucy play'd;
And thine too is the last green field
  That Lucy's eyes survey'd.

W. Wordsworth

222

THE EDUCATION OF NATURE

Three years she grew in sun and shower;
Then Nature said, 'A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown;
This Child I to myself will take;
She shall be mine, and I will make
A lady of my own.

'Myself will to my darling be
Both law and impulse: and with me
The girl, in rock and plain,
In earth and heaven, in glade and bower,
Shall feel an overseeing power
To kindle or restrain.

'She shall be sportive as the fawn
That wild with glee across the lawn
Or up the mountain springs;
And hers shall be the breathing balm,
And hers the silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things.

'The floating clouds their state shall lend
To her; for her the willow bend;
Nor shall she fail to see
Ev'n in the motions of the storm
Grace that shall mould the maiden's form
By silent sympathy.

'The stars of midnight shall be dear
To her; and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
Shall pass into her face.

'And vital feelings of delight
Shall rear her form to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell;
Such thoughts to Lucy I will give
While she and I together live
Here in this happy dell.'

Thus Nature spake—The work was done—
How soon my Lucy's race was run!
She died, and left to me
This heath, this calm and quiet scene;
The memory of what has been,
And never more will be.

W. Wordsworth

223

A slumber did my spirit seal;
I had no human fears:
She seem'd a thing that could not feel
The touch of earthly years.

No motion has she now, no force;
She neither hears nor sees;
Roll'd round in earth's diurnal course
With rocks, and stones, and trees.

W. Wordsworth

224

A LOST LOVE

I meet thy pensive, moonlight face;
Thy thrilling voice I hear;
And former hours and scenes retrace,
Too fleeting, and too dear!

Then sighs and tears flow fast and free,
Though none is nigh to share;
And life has nought beside for me
So sweet as this despair.

There are crush'd hearts that will not break;
And mine, methinks, is one;
Or thus I should not weep and wake,
And thou to slumber gone.

I little thought it thus could be
In days more sad and fair—
That earth could have a place for me,
And thou no longer there.

Yet death cannot our hearts divide,
Or make thee less my own:
'Twere sweeter sleeping at thy side
Than watching here alone.

Yet never, never can we part,
While Memory holds her reign:
Thine, thine is still this wither'd heart,
Till we shall meet again.

H. F. Lyte

225

LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER

A Chieftain to the Highlands bound
Cries 'Boatman, do not tarry!
And I'll give thee a silver pound
To row us o'er the ferry!'

'Now who be ye, would cross Lochgyle,
This dark and stormy water?'
'O I'm the chief of Ulva's isle,
And this, Lord Ullin's daughter.

'And fast before her father's men
Three days we've fled together,
For should he find us in the glen,
My blood would stain the heather.

'His horsemen hard behind us ride—
Should they our steps discover,
Then who will cheer my bonny bride,
When they have slain her lover?'

Out spoke the hardy Highland wight,
'I'll go, my chief, I'm ready:
It is not for your silver bright,
But for your winsome lady:—

'And by my word! the bonny bird
In danger shall not tarry;
So though the waves are raging white
I'll row you o'er the ferry.'

By this the storm grew loud apace,
The water-wraith was shrieking;
And in the scowl of Heaven each face
Grew dark as they were speaking.

But still as wilder blew the wind,
And as the night grew drearer,
Adown the glen rode arméd men,
Their trampling sounded nearer.

'O haste thee, haste!' the lady cries,
'Though tempests round us gather;
I'll meet the raging of the skies,
But not an angry father.'

The boat has left a stormy land,
A stormy sea before her,—
When, oh! too strong for human hand
The tempest gather'd o'er her.

And still they row'd amidst the roar
Of waters fast prevailing:
Lord Ullin reach'd that fatal shore,—
His wrath was changed to wailing.

For, sore dismay'd, through storm and shade
His child he did discover;—
One lovely hand she stretch'd for aid,
And one was round her lover.

'Come back! come back!' he cried in grief
'Across this stormy water:
And I'll forgive your Highland chief,
My daughter!—Oh, my daughter!'

'Twas vain: the loud waves lash'd the shore,
Return or aid preventing:
The waters wild went o'er his child,
And he was left lamenting.

T. Campbell

226

LUCY GRAY

Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray:
And when I cross'd the wild,
I chanced to see at break of day
The solitary child.

No mate, no comrade, Lucy knew;
She dwelt on a wide moor,
The sweetest thing that ever grew
Beside a human door!

You yet may spy the fawn at play,
The hare upon the green;
But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
Will never more be seen.

'To-night will be a stormy night—
You to the town must go;
And take a lantern, Child, to light
Your mother through the snow.'

'That, Father! will I gladly do:
'Tis scarcely afternoon—
The minster-clock has just struck two
And yonder is the moon!'

At this the father raised his hook,
And snapp'd a faggot-band;
He plied his work;—and Lucy took
The lantern in her hand.

Not blither is the mountain roe;
With many a wanton stroke
Her feet disperse the powdery snow,
That rises up like smoke.

The storm came on before its time:
She wander'd up and down;
And many a hill did Lucy climb:
But never reach'd the town.

The wretched parents all that night
Went shouting far and wide;
But there was neither sound nor sight
To serve them for a guide.

At day-break on a hill they stood
That overlook'd the moor;
And thence they saw the bridge of wood
A furlong from their door.

They wept—and, turning homeward, cried
'In heaven we all shall meet!'
—When in the snow the mother spied
The print of Lucy's feet.

Then downwards from the steep hill's edge
They track'd the footmarks small;
And through the broken hawthorn hedge,
And by the long stone-wall:

And then an open field they cross'd:
The marks were still the same;
They track'd them on, nor ever lost:
And to the bridge they came:

They follow'd from the snowy bank
Those footmarks, one by one,
Into the middle of the plank;
And further there were none!

—Yet some maintain that to this day
She is a living child;
That you may see sweet Lucy Gray
Upon the lonesome wild.

O'er rough and smooth she trips along,
And never looks behind;
And sings a solitary song
That whistles in the wind.

W. Wordsworth

227

JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

'Why weep ye by the tide, ladie?
Why weep ye by the tide?
I'll wed ye to my youngest son,
And ye sall be his bride:
And ye sall be his bride, ladie,
Sae comely to be seen'—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

'Now let this wilfu' grief be done,
And dry that cheek so pale;
Young Frank is chief of Errington
And lord of Langley-dale;
His step is first in peaceful ha',
His sword in battle keen'—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

'A chain of gold ye sall not lack,
Nor braid to bind your hair,
Nor mettled hound, nor managed hawk,
Nor palfrey fresh and fair;
And you the foremost o' them a'
Shall ride our forest-queen'—
But aye she loot the tears down fa'
For Jock of Hazeldean.

The kirk was deck'd at morning-tide,
The tapers glimmer'd fair;
The priest and bride-groom wait the bride,
And dame and knight are there:
They sought her baith by bower and ha';
The ladie was not seen!
She's o'er the Border, and awa'
Wi' Jock of Hazeldean.

Sir W. Scott

228

LOVE'S PHILOSOPHY

The fountains mingle with the river
And the rivers with the ocean,
The winds of heaven mix for ever
With a sweet emotion;
Nothing in the world is single,
All things by a law divine
In one another's being mingle—
Why not I with thine?

See the mountains kiss high heaven
And the waves clasp one another;
No sister-flower would be forgiven
If it disdain'd its brother:
And the sunlight clasps the earth,
And the moon beams kiss the sea—
What are all these kissings worth,
If thou kiss not me?

P. B. Shelley

229

ECHOES

How sweet the answer Echo makes
To Music at night
When, roused by lute or horn, she wakes,
And far away o'er lawns and lakes
Goes answering light!

Yet Love hath echoes truer far
And far more sweet
Than e'er, beneath the moonlight's star,
Of horn or lute or soft guitar
The songs repeat.

'Tis when the sigh,—in youth sincere
And only then,
The sigh that's breathed for one to hear—
Is by that one, that only Dear
Breathed back again.

T. Moore

230

A SERENADE

Ah! County Guy, the hour is nigh,
The sun has left the lea,
The orange-flower perfumes the bower,
The breeze is on the sea.
The lark, his lay who thrill'd all day,
Sits hush'd his partner nigh;
Breeze, bird, and flower confess the hour,
But where is County Guy?

The village maid steals through the shade
Her shepherd's suit to hear;
To Beauty shy, by lattice high,
Sings high-born Cavalier.
The star of Love, all stars above,
Now reigns o'er earth and sky,
And high and low the influence know—
But where is County Guy?

Sir W. Scott

231

TO THE EVENING STAR

Gem of the crimson-colour'd Even,
Companion of retiring day,
Why at the closing gates of heaven,
Beloved Star, dost thou delay?

So fair thy pensile beauty burns
When soft the tear of twilight flows;
So due thy plighted love returns
To chambers brighter than the rose;

To Peace, to Pleasure, and to Love
So kind a star thou seem'st to be,
Sure some enamour'd orb above
Descends and burns to meet with thee.

Thine is the breathing, blushing hour
When all unheavenly passions fly,
Chased by the soul-subduing power
Of Love's delicious witchery.

O! sacred to the fall of day
Queen of propitious stars, appear,
And early rise, and long delay,
When Caroline herself is here!

Shine on her chosen green resort
Whose trees the sunward summit crown,
And wanton flowers, that well may court
An angel's feet to tread them down:—

Shine on her sweetly scented road
Thou star of evening's purple dome,
That lead'st the nightingale abroad,
And guid'st the pilgrim to his home.

Shine where my charmer's sweeter breath
Embalms the soft exhaling dew,
Where dying winds a sigh bequeath
To kiss the cheek of rosy hue:—

Where, winnow'd by the gentle air,
Her silken tresses darkly flow
And fall upon her brow so fair,
Like shadows on the mountain snow.

Thus, ever thus, at day's decline
In converse sweet to wander far—
O bring with thee my Caroline,
And thou shalt be my Ruling Star!

T. Campbell

232

TO THE NIGHT

Swiftly walk over the western wave,
Spirit of Night!
Out of the misty eastern cave
Where, all the long and lone daylight,
Thou wovest dreams of joy and fear
Which make thee terrible and dear,—
Swift be thy flight!

Wrap thy form in a mantle gray
Star-inwrought;
Blind with thine hair the eyes of Day,
Kiss her until she be wearied out:
Then wander o'er city and sea and land,
Touching all with thine opiate wand—
Come, long-sought!

When I arose and saw the dawn,
I sigh'd for thee;
When light rode high, and the dew was gone,
And noon lay heavy on flower and tree,
And the weary Day turn'd to his rest
Lingering like an unloved guest,
I sigh'd for thee.

Thy brother Death came, and cried,
Wouldst thou me?
Thy sweet child Sleep, the filmy-eyed,
Murmur'd like a noon-tide bee:
Shall I nestle near thy side?
Wouldst thou me?—And I replied
No, not thee!

Death will come when thou art dead,
Soon, too soon—
Sleep will come when thou art fled;
Of neither would I ask the boon
I ask of thee, belovéd Night—
Swift be thine approaching flight,
Come soon, soon!

P. B. Shelley

233

TO A DISTANT FRIEND

Why art thou silent? Is thy love a plant
Of such weak fibre that the treacherous air
Of absence withers what was once so fair?
Is there no debt to pay, no boon to grant?

Yet have my thoughts for thee been vigilant,
Bound to thy service with unceasing care—
The mind's least generous wish a mendicant
For nought but what thy happiness could spare.

Speak!—though this soft warm heart, once free to hold
A thousand tender pleasures, thine and mine,
Be left more desolate, more dreary cold

Than a forsaken bird's-nest fill'd with snow
'Mid its own bush of leafless eglantine—
Speak, that my torturing doubts their end may know!

W. Wordsworth

234

When we two parted
In silence and tears,
Half broken-hearted,
To sever for years,
Pale grew thy cheek and cold,
Colder thy kiss;
Truly that hour foretold
Sorrow to this!

The dew of the morning
Sunk chill on my brow;
It felt like the warning
Of what I feel now.
Thy vows are all broken,
And light is thy fame:
I hear thy name spoken
And share in its shame.

They name thee before me,
A knell to mine ear;
A shudder comes o'er me—
Why wert thou so dear?
They know not I knew thee
Who knew thee too well:
Long, long shall I rue thee,
Too deeply to tell.

In secret we met:
In silence I grieve
That thy heart could forget,
Thy spirit deceive.
If I should meet thee
After long years,
How should I greet thee?—
With silence and tears.

Lord Byron

235

HAPPY INSENSIBILITY

In a drear-nighted December,
Too happy, happy tree,
Thy branches ne'er remember
Their green felicity:
The north cannot undo them
With a sleety whistle through them,
Nor frozen thawings glue them
From budding at the prime.

In a drear-nighted December,
Too happy, happy brook,
Thy bubblings ne'er remember
Apollo's summer look;
But with a sweet forgetting
They stay their crystal fretting,
Never, never petting
About the frozen time.

Ah! would 'twere so with many
A gentle girl and boy!
But were there ever any
Writhed not at passéd joy?
To know the change and feel it,
When there is none to heal it
Nor numbéd sense to steal it—
Was never said in rhyme.

J. Keats

236

Where shall the lover rest
  Whom the fates sever
From his true maiden's breast
  Parted for ever?

Where, through groves deep and high
  Sounds the far billow,
Where early violets die
  Under the willow.
    Eleu loro
  Soft shall be his pillow.

There through the summer day
  Cool streams are laving:
There, while the tempests sway,
  Scarce are boughs waving;
There thy rest shalt thou take,
  Parted for ever,
Never again to wake
  Never, O never!
    Eleu loro
  Never, O never!

Where shall the traitor rest,
  He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
  Ruin, and leave her?
In the lost battle,
  Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle
  With groans of the dying;
    Eleu loro
  There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
  O'er the falsehearted;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap
  Ere life be parted:
Shame and dishonour sit
  By his grave ever;
    Blessing shall hallow it
  Never, O never!
    Eleu loro
  Never, O never!

Sir W. Scott

237

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI

'O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms,
Alone and palely loitering?
The sedge has wither'd from the lake
And no birds sing.

'O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms!
So haggard and so woe-begone?
The squirrel's granary is full,
And the harvest's done.

'I see a lily on thy brow
With anguish moist and fever-dew,
And on thy cheeks a fading rose
Fast withereth too.

'I met a lady in the meads,
Full beautiful—a faery's child,
Her hair was long, her foot was light,
And her eyes were wild.

'I made a garland for her head,
And bracelets too, and fragrant zone;
She look'd at me as she did love,
And made sweet moan.

'I set her on my pacing steed
And nothing else saw all day long,
For sidelong would she bend, and sing
A faery's song.

'She found me roots of relish sweet,
And honey wild and manna-dew,
And sure in language strange she said
"I love thee true."

'She took me to her elfin grot,
And there she wept and sigh'd full sore;
And there I shut her wild wild eyes
With kisses four.

'And there she lulléd me asleep,
And there I dream'd—Ah! woe betide!
The latest dream I ever dream'd
On the cold hill's side.

'I saw pale kings and princes too,
Pale warriors, death-pale were they all:
They cried—"La belle Dame sans Merci
Hath thee in thrall!"

'I saw their starved lips in the gloam
With horrid warning gapéd wide,
And I awoke and found me here
On the cold hill's side.

'And this is why I sojourn here
Alone and palely loitering,
Though the sedge is wither'd from the lake,
And no birds sing.'

J. Keats

238

THE ROVER

'A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
A weary lot is thine!
To pull the thorn thy brow to braid,
And press the rue for wine.
A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien,
A feather of the blue,
A doublet of the Lincoln green—
No more of me you knew
My Love!
No more of me you knew.

'This morn is merry June, I trow,
The rose is budding fain;
But she shall bloom in winter snow
Ere we two meet again.'

He turn'd his charger as he spake
Upon the river shore,
He gave the bridle-reins a shake,
Said 'Adieu for evermore
My Love!
And adieu for evermore.'

Sir W. Scott

239

THE FLIGHT OF LOVE

When the lamp is shatter'd
The light in the dust lies dead—
When the cloud is scatter'd,
The rainbow's glory is shed.
When the lute is broken,
Sweet tones are remember'd not;
When the lips have spoken,
Loved accents are soon forgot.

As music and splendour
Survive not the lamp and the lute,
The heart's echoes render
No song when the spirit is mute—
No song but sad dirges,
Like the wind through a ruin'd cell,
Or the mournful surges
That ring the dead seaman's knell.

When hearts have once mingled,
Love first leaves the well-built nest;
The weak one is singled
To endure what it once possesst.
O Love! who bewailest
The frailty of all things here,
Why choose you the frailest
For your cradle, your home, and your bier?

Its passions will rock thee
As the storms rock the ravens on high;
Bright reason will mock thee
Like the sun from a wintry sky.
From thy nest every rafter
Will rot, and thine eagle home
Leave thee naked to laughter,
When leaves fall and cool winds come.

P. B. Shelley

240

THE MAID OF NEIDPATH

O lovers' eyes are sharp to see,
And lovers' ears in hearing;
And love, in life's extremity,
Can lend an hour of cheering.
Disease had been in Mary's bower
And slow decay from mourning,
Though now she sits on Neidpath's tower
To watch her Love's returning.

All sunk and dim her eyes so bright,
Her form decay'd by pining,
Till through her wasted hand, at night,
You saw the taper shining.
By fits a sultry hectic hue
Across her cheek was flying;
By fits so ashy pale she grew
Her maidens thought her dying.

Yet keenest powers to see and hear
Seem'd in her frame residing;
Before the watch-dog prick'd his ear
She heard her lover's riding;
Ere scarce a distant form was kenn'd
She knew and waved to greet him
And o'er the battlement did bend
As on the wing to meet him.

He came—he pass'd—an heedless gaze
As o'er some stranger glancing;
Her welcome, spoke in faltering phrase,
Lost in his courser's prancing—
The castle-arch, whose hollow tone
Returns each whisper spoken,
Could scarcely catch the feeble moan
Which told her heart was broken.

Sir W. Scott

241

Earl March look'd on his dying child,
And, smit with grief to view her—
The youth, he cried, whom I exiled
Shall be restored to woo her.

She's at the window many an hour
His coming to discover:
And he look'd up to Ellen's bower
And she look'd on her lover—

But ah! so pale, he knew her not,
Though her smile on him was dwelling—
And am I then forgot—forgot?
It broke the heart of Ellen.

In vain he weeps, in vain he sighs,
Her cheek is cold as ashes;
Nor love's own kiss shall wake those eyes
To lift their silken lashes.

T. Campbell

242

Bright Star! would I were steadfast as thou art—
Not in lone splendour hung aloft the night,
And watching, with eternal lids apart,
Like Nature's patient sleepless Eremite,

The moving waters at their priestlike task
Of pure ablution round earth's human shores,
Or gazing on the new soft fallen mask
Of snow upon the mountains and the moors:—

No—yet still steadfast, still unchangeable,
Pillow'd upon my fair Love's ripening breast
To feel for ever its soft fall and swell,
Awake for ever in a sweet unrest;

Still, still to hear her tender-taken breath,
And so live ever,—or else swoon to death.

J. Keats

243

THE TERROR OF DEATH

When I have fears that I may cease to be
Before my pen has glean'd my teeming brain,
Before high-piléd books, in charact'ry
Hold like rich garners the full-ripen'd grain;

When I behold, upon the night's starr'd face,
Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
And think that I may never live to trace
Their shadows, with the image hand of chance;

And when I feel, fair Creature of an hour!
That I shall never look upon thee more,
Never have relish in the faery power
Of unreflecting love—then on the shore

Of the wide world I stand alone, and think
Till Love and Fame to nothingness do sink.

J. Keats

244

DESIDERIA

Surprized by joy—impatient as the wind—
I turn'd to share the transport—Oh! with whom
But Thee—deep buried in the silent tomb,
That spot which no vicissitude can find?

Love, faithful love recall'd thee to my mind—
But how could I forget thee? Through what power
Even for the least division of an hour
Have I been so beguiled as to be blind

To my most grievous loss!—That thought's return
Was the worst pang that sorrow ever bore
Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,

Knowing my heart's best treasure was no more;
That neither present time, nor years unborn
Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.

W. Wordsworth

245

At the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping, I fly
To the lone vale we loved, when life shone warm in thine eye;
And I think oft, if spirits can steal from the regions of air
To revisit past scenes of delight, thou wilt come to me there
And tell me our love is remember'd, even in the sky!

Then I sing the wild song it once was rapture to hear
When our voices, commingling, breathed like one on the ear;
And as Echo far off through the vale my sad orison rolls,
I think, oh my Love! 'tis thy voice, from the Kingdom of Souls
Faintly answering still the notes that once were so dear.

T. Moore

246

ELEGY ON THYRZA

And thou art dead, as young and fair
  As aught of mortal birth;
And forms so soft and charms so rare
  Too soon return'd to Earth!
Though Earth received them in her bed,
And o'er the spot the crowd may tread
  In carelessness or mirth,
There is an eye which could not brook
A moment on that grave to look.

I will not ask where thou liest low
  Nor gaze upon the spot:
There flowers or weeds at will may grow
  So I behold them not:
It is enough for me to prove
That what I loved, and long must love,
  Like common earth can rot;
To me there needs no stone to tell
'Tis Nothing that I loved so well.

Yet did I love thee to the last,
  As fervently as thou
Who didst not change through all the past
  And canst not alter now.
The love where Death has set his seal
Nor age can chill, nor rival steal,
  Nor falsehood disavow:
And, what were worse, thou canst not see
Or wrong, or change, or fault in me.

The better days of life were ours;
  The worst can be but mine:
The sun that cheers, the storm that lours,
  Shall never more be thine.

The silence of that dreamless sleep
I envy now too much to weep;
  Nor need I to repine
That all those charms have pass'd away
I might have watch'd through long decay.

The flower in ripen'd bloom unmatch'd
  Must fall the earliest prey;
Though by no hand untimely snatch'd,
  The leaves must drop away.
And yet it were a greater grief
To watch it withering, leaf by leaf,
  Than see it pluck'd today;
Since earthly eye but ill can bear
To trace the change to foul from fair.

I know not if I could have borne
  To see thy beauties fade;
The night that follow'd such a morn
  Had worn a deeper shade:
Thy day without a cloud hath past,
And thou wert lovely to the last,
  Extinguish'd, not decay'd;
As stars that shoot along the sky
Shine brightest as they fall from high.

As once I wept, if I could weep,
  My tears might well be shed
To think I was not near, to keep
  One vigil o'er thy bed:
To gaze, how fondly! on thy face,
To fold thee in a faint embrace,
  Uphold thy drooping head;
And show that love, however vain,
Nor thou nor I can feel again.

Yet how much less it were to gain,
  Though thou hast left me free,
The loveliest things that still remain
  Than thus remember thee!

The all of thine that cannot die
Through dark and dread Eternity
  Returns again to me,
And more thy buried love endears
Than aught except its living years.

Lord Byron

247

One word is too often profaned
  For me to profane it,
One feeling too falsely disdain'd
  For thee to disdain it.
One hope is too like despair
  For prudence to smother,
And pity from thee more dear
  Than that from another.

I can give not what men call love;
  But wilt thou accept not
The worship the heart lifts above
  And the Heavens reject not:
The desire of the moth for the star,
  Of the night for the morrow,
The devotion to something afar
  From the sphere of our sorrow?

P. B. Shelley

248

GATHERING SONG OF DONALD THE BLACK

Pibroch of Donuil Dhu
  Pibroch of Donuil
Wake thy wild voice anew,
  Summon Clan Conuil.

Come away, come away,
Hark to the summons!
Come in your war-array,
Gentles and commons.

Come from deep glen, and
From mountain so rocky;
The war-pipe and pennon
Are at Inverlocky.
Come every hill-plaid, and
True heart that wears one,
Come every steel blade, and
Strong hand that bears one.

Leave untended the herd,
The flock without shelter;
Leave the corpse uninterr'd,
The bride at the altar;
Leave the deer, leave the steer,
Leave nets and barges:
Come with your fighting gear,
Broadswords and targes.

Come as the winds come, when
Forests are rended,
Come as the waves come, when
Navies are stranded:
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come;
See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume
Blended with heather.
Cast your plaids, draw your blades,
Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu
Knell for the onset!

Sir W. Scott

249

A wet sheet and a flowing sea,
A wind that follows fast
And fills the white and rustling sail
And bends the gallant mast;
And bends the gallant mast, my boys,
While like the eagle free
Away the good ship flies, and leaves
Old England on the lee.

O for a soft and gentle wind!
I heard a fair one cry;
But give to me the snoring breeze
And white waves heaving high;
And white waves heaving high, my lads,
The good ship tight and free—
The world of waters is our home,
And merry men are we.

There's tempest in yon hornéd moon,
And lightning in yon cloud;
But hark the music, mariners!
The wind is piping loud:
The wind is piping loud, my boys,
The lightning flashes free—
While the hollow oak our palace is,
Our heritage the sea.

A. Cunningham.

250

Ye Mariners of England
That guard our native seas!
Whose flag has braved, a thousand years,
The battle and the breeze!
Your glorious standard launch again
To match another foe:

And sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long
And the stormy winds do blow.

The spirits of your fathers
Shall start from every wave—
For the deck it was their field of fame,
And Ocean was their grave:
Where Blake and mighty Nelson fell
Your manly hearts shall glow,
As ye sweep through the deep,
While the stormy winds do blow;
While the battle rages loud and long
And the stormy winds do blow.

Britannia needs no bulwarks,
No towers along the steep;
Her march is o'er the mountain-waves,
Her home is on the deep.
With thunders from her native oak
She quells the floods below—
As they roar on the shore,
When the stormy winds do blow;
When the battle rages loud and long,
And the stormy winds do blow.

The meteor flag of England
Shall yet terrific burn;
Till danger's troubled night depart
And the star of peace return.
Then, then, ye ocean-warriors!
Our song and feast shall flow
To the fame of your name,
When the storm has ceased to blow;
When the fiery fight is heard no more,
And the storm has ceased to blow.

T. Campbell

251

BATTLE OF THE BALTIC

Of Nelson and the North
Sing the glorious day's renown,
When to battle fierce came forth
All the might of Denmark's crown,
And her arms along the deep proudly shone;
By each gun the lighted brand
In a bold determined hand,
And the Prince of all the land
Led them on.

Like leviathans afloat
Lay their bulwarks on the brine;
While the sign of battle flew
On the lofty British line:
It was ten of April morn by the chime:
As they drifted on their path
There was silence deep as death;
And the boldest held his breath
For a time.

But the might of England flush'd
To anticipate the scene;
And her van the fleeter rush'd
O'er the deadly space between.
'Hearts of oak!' our captains cried, when each gun
From its adamantine lips
Spread a death-shade round the ship,
Like the hurricane eclipse
Of the sun.

Again! again! again!
And the havoc did not slack,
Till a feeble cheer the Dane
To our cheering sent us back;—

Their shots along the deep slowly boom;—
Then ceased—and all is wail,
As they strike the shatter'd sail;
Or in conflagration pale
Light the gloom.

Out spoke the victor then
As he hail'd them o'er the wave,
'Ye are brothers! ye are men!
And we conquer but to save:—
So peace instead of death let us bring:
But yield, proud foe, thy fleet
With the crews, at England's feet,
And make submission meet
To our King.'

Then Denmark bless'd our chief
That he gave her wounds repose;
And the sounds of joy and grief
From her people wildly rose,
As death withdrew his shades from the day:
While the sun look'd smiling bright
O'er a wide and woeful sight,
Where the fires of funeral light
Died away.

Now joy, old England, raise!
For the tidings of thy might,
By the festal cities' blaze,
Whilst the wine-cup shines in light;
And yet amidst that joy and uproar,
Let us think of them that sleep
Full many a fathom deep
By thy wild and stormy steep,
Elsinore!

Brave hearts! to Britain's pride
Once so faithful and so true,
On the deck of fame that died,
With the gallant good Riou:

Soft sigh the winds of Heaven o'er their grave!
While the billow mournful rolls
And the mermaid's song condoles
Singing glory to the souls
Of the brave!

T. Campbell

252

ODE TO DUTY

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!
O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a light to guide, a rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou who art victory and law
When empty terrors overawe;
From vain temptations dost set free,
And calm'st the weary strife of frail humanity!

There are who ask not if thine eye
Be on them; who, in love and truth
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad hearts! without reproach or blot,
Who do thy work, and know it not:
Oh! if through confidence misplaced
They fail, thy saving arms, dread Power! around them cast.

Serene will be our days and bright
And happy will our nature be
When love is an unerring light,
And joy its own security.
And they a blissful course may hold
Ev'n now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.

I, loving freedom, and untried,
No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
And oft, when in my heart was heard
Thy timely mandate, I deferr'd
The task, in smoother walks to stray;
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.

Through no disturbance of my soul
Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy controul,
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this uncharter'd freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance-desires:
My hopes no more must change their name;
I long for a repose that ever is the same.

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear
The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we anything so fair
As is the smile upon thy face:
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds,
And fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the Stars from wrong;
And the most ancient Heavens, through Thee, are fresh and strong.

To humbler functions, awful Power!
I call thee: I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
Oh let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live.

W. Wordsworth

253

ON THE CASTLE OF CHILLON

Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind!
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art,
For there thy habitation is the heart—
The heart which love of Thee alone can bind;

And when thy sons to fetters are consign'd,
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless gloom,
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.

Chillon! thy prison is a holy place
And thy sad floor an altar, for 'twas trod,
Until his very steps have left a trace

Worn as if thy cold pavement were a sod,
By Bonnivard! May none those marks efface!
For they appeal from tyranny to God.

Lord Byron

254

ENGLAND AND SWITZERLAND, 1802

Two Voices are there; one is of the Sea,
One of the Mountains; each a mighty voice:
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
They were thy chosen music, Liberty!

There came a tyrant, and with holy glee
Thou fought'st against him,—but hast vainly striven:
Thou from thy Alpine holds at length art driven,
Where not a torrent murmurs heard by thee.

—Of one deep bliss thine ear hath been bereft;
Then cleave, O cleave to that which still is left—
For, high-soul'd Maid, what sorrow would it be

That Mountain floods should thunder as before,
And Ocean bellow from his rocky shore,
And neither awful Voice be heard by Thee!

W. Wordsworth

255

ON THE EXTINCTION OF THE VENETIAN REPUBLIC

Once did She hold the gorgeous East in fee
And was the safeguard of the West: the worth
Of Venice did not fall below her birth,
Venice, the eldest child of Liberty.

She was a maiden city, bright and free;
No guile seduced, no force could violate;
And when she took unto herself a mate,
She must espouse the everlasting Sea.

And what if she had seen those glories fade,
Those titles vanish, and that strength decay,—
Yet shall some tribute of regret be paid

When her long life hath reach'd its final day:
Men are we, and must grieve when even the shade
Of that which once was great is pass'd away.

W. Wordsworth

256

LONDON, 1802

O Friend! I know not which way I must look
For comfort, being, as I am, opprest
To think that now our life is only drest
For show; mean handy-work of craftsman, cook,

Or groom!—We must run glittering like a brook
In the open sunshine, or we are unblest;
The wealthiest man among us is the best:
No grandeur now in nature or in book

Delights us. Rapine, avarice, expense,
This is idolatry; and these we adore:
Plain living and high thinking are no more:

The homely beauty of the good old cause
Is gone; our peace, our fearful innocence,
And pure religion breathing household laws.

W. Wordsworth

257

THE SAME

Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour:
England hath need of thee: she is a fen
Of stagnant waters: altar, sword, and pen,
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,

Have forfeited their ancient English dower
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men:
Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.

Thy soul was like a Star, and dwelt apart:
Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea,
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free;

So didst thou travel on life's common way
In cheerful godliness; and yet the heart
The lowliest duties on herself did lay.

W. Wordsworth

258

When I have borne in memory what has tamed
Great nations; how ennobling thoughts depart
When men change swords for ledgers, and desert
The student's bower for gold,—some fears unnamed

I had, my Country!—am I to be blamed?
Now, when I think of thee, and what thou art,
Verily, in the bottom of my heart
Of those unfilial fears I am ashamed.

For dearly must we prize thee; we who find
In thee a bulwark for the cause of men;
And I by my affection was beguiled:

What wonder if a Poet now and then,
Among the many movements of his mind,
Felt for thee as a lover or a child!

W. Wordsworth

259

HOHENLINDEN

On Linden, when the sun was low,
All bloodless lay the untrodden snow;
And dark as winter was the flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly.

But Linden saw another sight,
When the drum beat at dead of night
Commanding fires of death to light
The darkness of her scenery.

By torch and trumpet fast array'd
Each horseman drew his battle-blade,
And furious every charger neigh'd
To join the dreadful revelry.

Then shook the hills with thunder riven;
Then rush'd the steel, to battle driven;
And louder than the bolts of Heaven
Far flashed the red artillery.

But redder yet that light shall glow
On Linden's hills of stainéd snow;
And bloodier yet the torrent flow
Of Iser, rolling rapidly.

'Tis morn; but scarce yon level sun
Can pierce the war-clouds rolling dun,
Where furious Frank and fiery Hun
Shout in their sulphurous canopy.

The combat deepens. On, ye Brave
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich! all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry!

Few, few shall part, where many meet!
The snow shall be their winding-sheet,
And every turf beneath their feet
Shall be a soldier's sepulchre.

T. Campbell

260

AFTER BLENHEIM

It was a summer evening,
Old Kaspar's work was done,
And he before his cottage door
Was sitting in the sun;
And by him sported on the green
His little grandchild Wilhelmine.

She saw her brother Peterkin
Roll something large and round
Which he beside the rivulet
In playing there had found;
He came to ask what he had found
That was so large and smooth and round.

Old Kaspar took it from the boy
Who stood expectant by;
And then the old man shook his head,
And with a natural sigh
'"Tis some poor fellow's skull,' said he,
'Who fell in the great victory.

'I find them in the garden,
For there's many here about;
And often when I go to plough
The ploughshare turns them out.
For many thousand men,' said he,
'Were slain in that great victory.'

'Now tell us what 'twas all about,'
Young Peterkin he cries;
And little Wilhelmine looks up
With wonder-waiting eyes;
'Now tell us all about the war,
And what they fought each other for.'

'It was the English,' Kaspar cried,
'Who put the French to rout;
But what they fought each other for
I could not well make out.
But everybody said,' quoth he,
'That 'twas a famous victory.

'My father lived at Blenheim then,
Yon little stream hard by;
They burnt his dwelling to the ground,
And he was forced to fly:
So with his wife and child he fled,
Nor had he where to rest his head.

'With fire and sword the country round
Was wasted far and wide,
And many a childing mother then
And newborn baby died:
But things like that, you know, must be
At every famous victory.

'They say it was a shocking sight
After the field was won;
For many thousand bodies here
Lay rotting in the sun:
But things like that, you know, must be
After a famous victory.

'Great praise the Duke of Marlbro' won
And our good Prince Eugene;'
'Why 'twas a very wicked thing!'
Said little Wilhelmine;
'Nay . . nay . . my little girl,' quoth he,
'It was a famous victory.

'And everybody praised the Duke
Who this great fight did win.'
'But what good came of it at last?'
Quoth little Peterkin:—
'Why that I cannot tell,' said he,
'But 'twas a famous victory.'

R. Southey

261

PRO PATRIA MORI

When he who adores thee has left but the name
Of his fault and his sorrows behind,
Oh! say wilt thou weep, when they darken the fame
Of a life that for thee was resign'd!
Yes, weep, and however my foes may condemn,
Thy tears shall efface their decree;
For, Heaven can witness, though guilty to them,
I have been but too faithful to thee.

With thee were the dreams of my earliest love;
Every thought of my reason was thine:
In my last humble prayer to the Spirit above
Thy name shall be mingled with mine!
Oh! blest are the lovers and friends who shall live
The days of thy glory to see;
But the next dearest blessing that Heaven can give
Is the pride of thus dying for thee.

T. Moore

262

THE BURIAL OF SIR JOHN MOORE AT CORUNNA

Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corpse to the rampart we hurried;
Not a soldier discharged his farewell shot
O'er the grave where our hero we buried.

We buried him darkly at dead of night,
The sods with our bayonets turning;
By the struggling moonbeam's misty light
And the lantern dimly burning.

No useless coffin enclosed his breast,
Not in sheet or in shroud we wound him;
But he lay like a warrior taking his rest,
With his martial cloak around him.

Few and short were the prayers we said,
And we spoke not a word of sorrow;
But we steadfastly gazed on the face that was dead,
And we bitterly thought of the morrow.

We thought, as we hollow'd his narrow bed
And smoothed down his lonely pillow,
That the foe and the stranger would tread o'er his head,
And we far away on the billow!

Lightly they'll talk of the spirit that's gone
And o'er his cold ashes upbraid him,—
But little he'll reck, if they let him sleep on
In the grave where a Briton has laid him.

But half of our heavy task was done
When the clock struck the hour for retiring:
And we heard the distant and random gun
That the foe was sullenly firing.

Slowly and sadly we laid him down,
From the field of his fame fresh and gory;
We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone,
But we left him alone with his glory.

C. Wolfe

263

SIMON LEE THE OLD HUNTSMAN

In the sweet shire of Cardigan,
Not far from pleasant Ivor Hall,
An old man dwells, a little man,—
'Tis said he once was tall.
Full five-and-thirty years he lived
A running huntsman merry;
And still the centre of his cheek
Is red as a ripe cherry.

No man like him the horn could sound,
And hill and valley rang with glee,
When Echo bandied, round and round,
The halloo of Simon Lee.
In those proud days he little cared
For husbandry or tillage;
To blither tasks did Simon rouse
The sleepers of the village.

He all the country could outrun,
Could leave both man and horse behind;
And often, ere the chase was done
He reel'd and was stone-blind.
And still there's something in the world
At which his heart rejoices;
For when the chiming hounds are out,
He dearly loves their voices.

But oh the heavy change!—bereft
Of health, strength, friends and kindred, see!
Old Simon to the world is left
In liveried poverty:—

His master's dead, and no one now
Dwells in the Hall of Ivor;
Men, dogs, and horses, all are dead;
He is the sole survivor.

And he is lean and he is sick,
His body, dwindled and awry,
Rests upon ankles swoln and thick;
His legs are thin and dry.
One prop he has, the only one,—
His wife, an aged woman,
Lives with him, near the waterfall,
Upon the village common.

Beside their moss-grown hut of clay,
Not twenty paces from the door,
A scrap of land they have, but they
Are poorest of the poor.
This scrap of land he from the heath
Enclosed when he was stronger;
But what to him avails the land
Which he can till no longer?

Oft, working by her husband's side,
Ruth does what Simon cannot do;
For she, with scanty cause for pride,
Is stouter of the two.
And, though you with your utmost skill
From labour could not wean them,
'Tis little, very little, all
That they can do between them.

Few months of life has he in store
As he to you will tell,
For still, the more he works, the more
Do his weak ankles swell.
My gentle Reader, I perceive
How patiently you've waited,
And now I fear that you expect
Some tale will be related.

O Reader! had you in your mind
Such stores as silent thought can bring,
O gentle Reader! you would find
A tale in every thing.
What more I have to say is short,
And you must kindly take it:
It is no tale; but, should you think,
Perhaps a tale you'll make it.

One summer-day I chanced to see
This old Man doing all he could
To unearth the root of an old tree.
A stump of rotten wood.
The mattock totter'd in his hand;
So vain was his endeavour
That at the root of the old tree
He might have work'd for ever.

'You're overtask'd, good Simon Lee,
Give me your tool,' to him I said;
And at the word right gladly he Received my proffer'd aid.
I struck, and with a single blow
The tangled root I sever'd,
At which the poor old man so long
And vainly had endeavour'd.

The tears into his eyes were brought,
And thanks and praises seem'd to run
So fast out of his heart, I thought
They never would have done.
—I've heard of hearts unkind, kind deed
With coldness still returning;
Alas! the gratitude of men
Hath oftener left me mourning.

W. Wordsworth

264

THE OLD FAMILIAR FACES

I have had playmates, I have had companions,
In my days of childhood, in my joyful school-days;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have been laughing, I have been carousing,
Drinking late, sitting late, with my bosom cronies;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I loved a Love once, fairest among women:
Closed are her doors on me, I must not see her—
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

I have a friend, a kinder friend has no man;
Like an ingrate, I left my friend abruptly;
Left him, to muse on the old familiar faces.

Ghost-like I paced round the haunts of my childhood,
Earth seem'd a desert I was bound to traverse,
Seeking to find the old familiar faces.

Friend of my bosom, thou more than a brother,
Why wert not thou born in my father's dwelling?
So might we talk of the old familiar faces,

How some they have died, and some they have left me,
And some are taken from me; all are departed;
All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

C. Lamb

265

THE JOURNEY ONWARDS

As slow our ship her foamy track
Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling pennant still look'd back
To that dear isle 'twas leaving.

So loth we part from all we love,
From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, as on we rove,
To those we've left behind us!

When, round the bowl, of vanish'd years
We talk with joyous seeming—
With smiles that might as well be tears,
So faint, so sad their beaming;
While memory brings us back again
Each early tie that twined us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then
To those we've left behind us!

And when, in other climes, we meet
Some isle or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flowery, wild, and sweet,
And nought but love is wanting;
We think how great had been our bliss
If Heaven had but assign'd us
To live and die in scenes like this,
With some we've left behind us!

As travellers oft look back at eve
When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon that light they leave
Still faint behind them glowing,—
So, when the close of pleasure's day
To gloom hath near consign'd us,
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of joy that's left behind us.

T. Moore

266

YOUTH AND AGE

There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away
When the glow of early thought declines in feeling's dull decay;

'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone,
which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is gone, ere youth itself be past.

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness
Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt, or ocean of excess:
The magnet of their course is gone, or only points in vain
The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall never stretch again.

Then the mortal coldness of the soul like death itself
comes down;
It cannot feel for others' woes, it dare not dream its own;
That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears,
And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.

Though wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth
distract the breast,
Through midnight hours that yield no more their former hope of rest;
'Tis but as ivy-leaves around the ruin'd turret wreathe,
All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

Oh could I feel as I have felt, or be what I have been,
Or weep as I could once have wept o'er many a vanish'd scene,—
As springs in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish
though they be,
So midst the wither'd waste of life, those tears would flow to me!

Lord Byron

267

A LESSON

There is a Flower, the lesser Celandine,
That shrinks like many more from cold and rain,
And the first moment that the sun may shine,
Bright as the sun himself, 'tis out again!

When hailstones have been falling, swarm on swarm,
Or blasts the green field and the trees distrest,
Oft have I seen it muffled up from harm
In close self-shelter, like a thing at rest.

But lately, one rough day, this Flower I past,
And recognized it, though an alter'd form,
Now standing forth an offering to the blast,
And buffeted at will by rain and storm.

I stopp'd and said, with inly-mutter'd voice,
'It doth not love the shower, nor seek the cold;
This neither is its courage nor its choice,
But its necessity in being old.

'The sunshine may not cheer it, nor the dew;
It cannot help itself in its decay;
Stiff in its members, wither'd, changed of hue,'—
And, in my spleen, I smiled that it was gray.

To be a prodigal's favourite—then, worse truth,
A miser's pensioner—behold our lot!
O Man! that from thy fair and shining youth
Age might but take the things Youth needed not!

W. Wordsworth

268

PAST AND PRESENT

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;

He never came a wink too soon
Nor brought too long a day;
But now, I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away.

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
The violets, and the lily-cups—
Those flowers made of light!
The lilacs where the robin built,
And where my brother set
The laburnum on his birth-day,—
The tree is living yet!

I remember, I remember
Where I was used to swing,
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then
That is so heavy now,
And summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow.

I remember, I remember
The fir trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky:
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from Heaven
Than when I was a boy.

T. Hood

269

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS

Oft in the stilly night
  Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Fond Memory brings the light
  Of other days around me:

The smiles, the tears
Of boyhood's years,
The words of love then spoken;
The eyes that shone,
Now dimm'd and gone,
The cheerful hearts now broken!
Thus in the stilly night
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.

When I remember all
The friends so link'd together
I've seen around me fall
Like leaves in wintry weather,
I feel like one
Who treads alone
Some banquet-hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled
Whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed!
Thus in the stilly night
Ere slumber's chain has bound me,
Sad Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.

T. Moore

270

STANZAS WRITTEN IN DEJECTION NEAR NAPLES

The sun is warm, the sky is clear,
The waves are dancing fast and bright,
Blue isles and snowy mountains wear
The purple noon's transparent might:
The breath of the moist earth is light
Around its unexpanded buds;
Like many a voice of one delight—
The winds', the birds', the ocean-floods'—
The city's voice itself is soft like Solitude's.

I see the deep's untrampled floor
With green and purple sea-weeds strown;
I see the waves upon the shore
Like light dissolved in star-showers thrown:
I sit upon the sands alone;
The lightning of the noon-tide ocean
Is flashing round me, and a tone
Arises from its measured motion—
How sweet! did any heart now share in my emotion.

Alas! I have not hope nor health,
Now peace within nor calm around,
Nor that content, surpassing wealth,
The sage in meditation found,
And walk'd with inward glory crown'd—
Nor fame, nor power, nor love, nor leisure;
Others I see whom these surround—
Smiling they live, and call life pleasure;
To me that cup has been dealt in another measure.

Yet now despair itself is mild
Even as the winds and waters are;
I could lie down like a tired child,
And weep away the life of care
Which I have borne, and yet must bear,—
Till death like sleep might steal on me,
And I might feel in the warm air
My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony.

P. B. Shelley

271

THE SCHOLAR

My days among the Dead are past;
Around me I behold,
Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
The mighty minds of old:
My never-failing friends are they,
With whom I converse day by day.

With them I take delight in weal
And seek relief in woe;
And while I understand and feel
How much to them I owe,
My cheeks have often been bedew'd
With tears of thoughtful gratitude.

My thoughts are with the Dead; with them
I live in long-past years,
Their virtues love, their faults condemn,
Partake their hopes and fears,
And from their lessons seek and find
Instruction with an humble mind.

My hopes are with the Dead; anon
My place with them will be,
And I with them shall travel on
Through all Futurity;
Yet leaving here a name, I trust,
That will not perish in the dust.

R. Southey

272

THE MERMAID TAVERN

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern,
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?
Have ye tippled drink more fine
Than mine host's Canary wine?
Or are fruits of Paradise
Sweeter than those dainty pies
Of venison? O generous food!
Drest as though bold Robin Hood
Would, with his Maid Marian,
Sup and bowse from horn and can.

I have heard that on a day
Mine host's sign-board flew away
Nobody knew whither, till
An astrologer's old quill
To a sheepskin gave the story,
Said he saw you in your glory,
Underneath a new-old sign
Sipping beverage divine,
And pledging with contented smack
The Mermaid in the Zodiac.

Souls of Poets dead and gone,
What Elysium have ye known,
Happy field or mossy cavern,
Choicer than the Mermaid Tavern?

J. Keats

273

THE PRIDE OF YOUTH

Proud Maisie is in the wood,
Walking so early;
Sweet Robin sits on the bush,
Singing so rarely.

'Tell me, thou bonny bird,
When shall I marry me?'
—'When six braw gentlemen
Kirkward shall carry ye.'

'Who makes the bridal bed,
Birdie say truly?'
—'The gray-headed sexton
That delves the grave duly.

'The glowworm o'er grave and stone
Shall light thee steady;
The owl from the steeple sing
Welcome, proud lady.'

Sir W. Scott

274

THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS

One more Unfortunate
Weary of breath
Rashly importunate,
Gone to her death!
Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashion'd so tenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Look at her garments
Clinging like cerements;
Whilst the wave constantly
Drips from her clothing;
Take her up instantly,
Loving, not loathing.

Touch her not scornfully,
Think of her mournfully,
Gently and humanly;
Not of the stains of her—
All that remains of her
Now is pure womanly.

Make no deep scrutiny
Into her mutiny
Rash and undutiful:
Past all dishonour,
Death has left on her
Only the beautiful.

Still, for all slips of hers,
One of Eve's family—
Wipe those poor lips of hers
Oozing so clammily.

Loop up her tresses
Escaped from the comb,
Her fair auburn tresses;
Whilst wonderment guesses
Where was her home?

Who was her father?
Who was her mother?
Had she a sister?
Had she a brother?
Or was there a dearer one
Still, and a nearer one
Yet, than all other?

Alas! for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun!
Oh! it was pitiful!
Near a whole city full,
Home she had none.

Sisterly, brotherly,
Fatherly, motherly
Feelings had changed:
Love, by harsh evidence,
Thrown from its eminence;
Even God's providence
Seeming estranged.

Where the lamps quiver
So far in the river,
With many a light
From window and casement,
From garret to basement,
She stood with amazement,
Houseless by night.

The bleak wind of March
Made her tremble and shiver
But not the dark arch,
Or the black flowing river:
Mad from life's history,
Glad to death's mystery
Swift to be hurl'd—
Any where, any where
Out of the world!

In she plunged boldly,
No matter how coldly
The rough river ran,—
Over the brink of it,
Picture it—think of it,
Dissolute Man!
Lave in it, drink of it,
Then, if you can!

Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care;
Fashion'd so slenderly,
Young, and so fair!

Ere her limbs frigidly
Stiffen too rigidly.
Decently, kindly,
Smooth and compose them,
And her eyes, close them,
Staring so blindly!

Dreadfully staring
Thro' muddy impurity,
As when with the daring
Last look of despairing
Fix'd on futurity.

Perishing gloomily,
Spurr'd by contumely,
Cold inhumanity,
Burning insanity,
Into her rest.
—Cross her hands humbly
As if praying dumbly,
Over her breast!

Owning her weakness,
Her evil behaviour,
And leaving, with meekness,
Her sins to her Saviour.

T. Hood

275

ELEGY

Oh snatch'd away in beauty's bloom!
On thee shall press no ponderous tomb;
But on thy turf shall roses rear
Their leaves, the earliest of the year,
And the wild cypress wave in tender gloom:

And oft by yon blue gushing stream
Shall Sorrow lean her drooping head,
And feed deep thought with many a dream,
And lingering pause and lightly tread;
Fond wretch! as if her step disturb'd the dead!

Away! we know that tears are vain,
That Death nor heeds nor hears distress:
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou, who tell'st me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

Lord Byron

276

HESTER

When maidens such as Hester die
Their place ye may not well supply,
Though ye among a thousand try
With vain endeavour.
A month or more hath she been dead,
Yet cannot I by force be led
To think upon the wormy bed
And her together.

A springy motion in her gait,
A rising step, did indicate
Of pride and joy no common rate
That flush'd her spirit:
I know not by what name beside
I shall it call: if 'twas not pride,
It was a joy to that allied
She did inherit.

Her parents held the Quaker rule,
Which doth the human feeling cool;
But she was train'd in Nature's school,
Nature had blest her.
A waking eye, a prying mind,
A heart that stirs, is hard to bind;
A hawk's keen sight ye cannot blind,
Ye could not Hester.

My sprightly neighbour! gone before
To that unknown and silent shore,
Shall we not meet, as heretofore
Some summer morning—
When from thy cheerful eyes a ray
Hath struck a bliss upon the day,
A bliss that would not go away,
A sweet fore-warning?

C. Lamb

277

TO MARY

If I had thought thou couldst have died,
I might not weep for thee;
But I forgot, when by thy side,
That thou could'st mortal be:
It never through my mind had past
The time would e'er be o'er,
And I on thee should look my last,
And thou shouldst smile no more!

And still upon that face I look,
And think 'twill smile again;
And still the thought I will not brook
That I must look in vain!
But when I speak—thou dost not say
What thou ne'er left'st unsaid;
And now I feel, as well I may,
Sweet Mary! thou art dead!

If thou wouldst stay, e'en as thou art,
All cold and all serene—
I still might press thy silent heart,
And where thy smiles have been.
While e'en thy chill, bleak corse I have,
Thou seemest still mine own;
But there I lay thee in thy grave—
And I am now alone!

I do not think, where'er thou art,
Thou hast forgotten me;
And I, perhaps, may soothe this heart,
In thinking too of thee:
Yet there was round thee such a dawn
Of light ne'er seen before,
As fancy never could have drawn,
And never can restore!

C. Wolfe

278

CORONACH

He is gone on the mountain,
  He is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain,
  When our need was the sorest.
The font reappearing
  From the raindrops shall borrow,
But to us comes no cheering,
  To Duncan no morrow!

The hand of the reaper
  Takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper
  Wails manhood in glory.
The autumn winds rushing
  Waft the leaves that are searest,
But our flower was in flushing
  When blighting was nearest.

Fleet foot on the correi,
  Sage counsel in cumber,
Red hand in the foray,
  How sound is thy slumber!
Like the dew on the mountain,
  Like the foam on the river,
Like the bubble on the fountain,
  Thou art gone; and for ever!

Sir W. Scott

279

THE DEATH BED

We watch'd her breathing thro' the night,
  Her breathing soft and low,
As in her breast the wave of life
  Kept heaving to and fro.

So silently we seem'd to speak,
  So slowly moved about,
As we had lent her half our powers
  To eke her living out.

Our very hopes belied our fears,
  Our fears our hopes belied—
We thought her dying when she slept,
  And sleeping when she died.

For when the morn came dim and sad
  And chill with early showers,
Her quiet eyelids closed—she had
  Another morn than ours.

T. Hood

280

AGNES

I saw her in childhood—
  A bright, gentle thing,
Like the dawn of the morn,
  Or the dews of the spring:
The daisies and hare-bells
  Her playmates all day;
Herself as light-hearted
  And artless as they.

I saw her again—
  A fair girl of eighteen,
Fresh glittering with graces
  Of mind and of mien.
Her speech was all music;
  Like moonlight she shone;
The envy of many,
  The glory of one.

Years, years fleeted over—
  I stood at her foot:
The bud had grown blossom,
  The blossom was fruit.

A dignified mother,
  Her infant she bore;
And look'd, I thought, fairer
  Than ever before.

I saw her once more—
  'Twas the day that she died;
Heaven's light was around her,
  And God at her side;
No wants to distress her,
  No fear to appal—
O then, I felt, then
  She was fairest of all!

H. F. Lyte

281

ROSABELLE

O listen, listen, ladies gay!
  No haughty feat of arms I tell;
Soft is the note, and sad the lay
  That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.

'Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
  And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
Rest thee in Castle Ravensheuch,
  Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day.

'The blackening wave is edged with white;
  To inch and rock the sea-mews fly;
The fishers have heard the Water-Sprite,
  Whose screams forebode that wreck is nigh.

'Last night the gifted Seer did view
  A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
Then stay thee, Fair, in Ravensheuch;
  Why cross the gloomy firth to-day?'

'Tis not because Lord Lindesay's heir
To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
But that my ladye-mother there
Sits lonely in her castle-hall.

'Tis not because the ring they ride,
And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
But that my sire the wine will chide
If 'tis not fill'd by Rosabelle.'

—O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire's light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It ruddied all the copse-wood glen;
'Twas seen from Dryden's groves of oak,
And seen from cavern'd Hawthornden.

Seem'd all on fire that chapel proud
Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffin'd lie,
Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seem'd all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale;
Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
And glimmer'd all the dead men's mail.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair—
So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high Saint Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold—
Lie buried within that proud chapelle;
Each one the holy vault doth hold—
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle.

And each Saint Clair was buried there,
With candle, with book, and with knell;
But the sea-caves rung, and the wild winds sung
The dirge of lovely Rosabelle.

Sir W. Scott

282

ON AN INFANT DYING AS SOON AS BORN

I saw wherein the shroud did lurk
A curious frame of Nature's work;
A flow'ret crushéd in the bud,
A nameless piece of Babyhood,
Was in her cradle-coffin lying;
Extinct, with scarce the sense of dying:
So soon to exchange the imprisoning womb
For darker closets of the tomb!
She did but ope an eye, and put
A clear beam forth, then straight up shut
For the long dark; ne'er more to see
Through glasses of mortality.
Riddle of destiny, who can show
What thy short visit meant, or know
What thy errand here below?
Shall we say, that Nature blind
Check'd her hand, and changed her mind
Just when she had exactly wrought
A finish'd pattern without fault?
Could she flag, or could she tire,
Or lack'd she the Promethean fire
(With her nine moons' long workings sicken'd)
That should thy little limbs have quicken'd?
Limbs so firm, they seem'd to assure
Life of health, and days mature:
Woman's self in miniature!
Limbs so fair, they might supply
(Themselves now but cold imagery)
The sculptor to make Beauty by.
Or did the stern-eyed Fate descry
That babe or mother, one must die;
So in mercy left the stock
And cut the branch; to save the shock
Of young years widow'd, and the pain
When Single State comes back again
To the lone man who, reft of wife,
Thenceforward drags a maiméd life?

The economy of Heaven is dark,
And wisest clerks have miss'd the mark
Why human buds, like this, should fall,
More brief than fly ephemeral
That has his day; while shrivell'd crones
Stiffen with age to stocks and stones;
And crabbéd use the conscience sears
In sinners of an hundred years.
—Mother's prattle, mother's kiss,
Baby fond, thou ne'er wilt miss:
Rites, which custom does impose,
Silver bells, and baby clothes;
Coral redder than those lips
Which pale death did late eclipse;
Music framed for infants' glee,
Whistle never tuned for thee;
Though thou want'st not, thou shalt have them,
Loving hearts were they which gave them.
Let not one be missing; nurse,
See them laid upon the hearse
Of infant slain by doom perverse.
Why should kings and nobles have
Pictured trophies to their grave,
And we, churls, to thee deny
Thy pretty toys with thee to lie—
A more harmless vanity?

C. Lamb

283

IN MEMORIAM

A child's a plaything for an hour;
  Its pretty tricks we try
For that or for a longer space,—
  Then tire, and lay it by.

But I knew one that to itself
  All seasons could control;
That would have mock'd the sense of pain
  Out of a grievéd soul.

Thou straggler into loving arms,
Young climber up of knees,
When I forget thy thousand ways
Then life and all shall cease!

M. Lamb

284

THE AFFLICTION OF MARGARET

Where art thou, my beloved Son,
Where art thou, worse to me than dead?
Oh find me, prosperous or undone!
Or if the grave be now thy bed,
Why am I ignorant of the same
That I may rest; and neither blame
Nor sorrow may attend thy name?

Seven years, alas! to have received
No tidings of an only child—
To have despair'd, have hoped, believed,
And been for ever more beguiled,—
Sometimes with thoughts of very bliss!
I catch at them, and then I miss;
Was ever darkness like to this?

He was among the prime in worth,
An object beauteous to behold;
Well born, well bred; I sent him forth
Ingenuous, innocent, and bold;
If things ensued that wanted grace
As hath been said, they were not base;
And never blush was on my face.

Ah! little doth the young-one dream
When full of play and childish cares,
What power is in his wildest scream
Heard by his mother unawares!
He knows it not, he cannot guess;
Years to a mother bring distress;
But do not make her love the less.

Neglect me! no, I suffer'd long
From that ill thought; and being blind
Said 'Pride shall help me in my wrong:
Kind mother have I been, as kind
As ever breathed:' and that is true;
I've wet my path with tears like dew,
Weeping for him when no one knew.

My Son, if thou be humbled, poor,
Hopeless of honour and of gain,
Oh! do not dread thy mother's door;
Think not of me with grief and pain:
I now can see with better eyes;
And worldly grandeur I despise
And fortune with her gifts and lies.

Alas! the fowls of heaven have wings,
And blasts of heaven will aid their flight;
They mount—how short a voyage brings
The wanderers back to their delight!
Chains tie us down by land and sea;
And wishes, vain as mine, may be
All that is left to comfort thee.

Perhaps some dungeon hears thee groan
Maim'd, mangled by inhuman men;
Or thou upon a desert thrown
Inheritest the lion's den;
Or hast been summon'd to the deep
Thou, thou, and all thy mates to keep
An incommunicable sleep.

I look for ghosts: but none will force
Their way to me; 'tis falsely said
That there was ever intercourse
Between the living and the dead;
For surely then I should have sight
Of him I wait for day and night
With love and longings infinite.

My apprehensions come in crowds;
I dread the rustling of the grass;
The very shadows of the clouds
Have power to shake me as they pass:
I question things, and do not find
One that will answer to my mind;
And all the world appears unkind.

Beyond participation lie
My troubles, and beyond relief:
If any chance to heave a sigh
They pity me, and not my grief.
Then come to me, my Son, or send
Some tidings that my woes may end!
I have no other earthly friend.

W. Wordsworth

285

HUNTING SONG

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
On the mountain dawns the day;
All the jolly chase is here
With hawk and horse and hunting-spear;
Hounds are in their couples yelling,
Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,
Merrily merrily mingle they,
'Waken, lords and ladies gay.'

Waken, lords and ladies gay,
The mist has left the mountain gray,
Springlets in the dawn are steaming,
Diamonds on the brake are gleaming;
And foresters have busy been
To track the buck in thicket green;
Now we come to chant our lay
'Waken, lords and ladies gay.'

Waken lords and ladies gay,
To the greenwood haste away;
We can show you where he lies,
Fleet of foot and tall of size;
We can show the marks he made
When 'gainst the oak his antlers fray'd;
You shall see him brought to bay;
'Waken, lords and ladies gay.'

Louder, louder chant the lay
Waken, lords and ladies gay!
Tell them youth and mirth and glee
Run a course as well as we;
Time, stern huntsman! who can baulk,
Stanch as hound and fleet as hawk;
Think of this, and rise with day,
Gentle lords and ladies gay!

Sir W. Scott

286

TO THE SKYLARK

Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky!
Dost thou despise the earth where cares abound?
Or while the wings aspire, are heart and eye
Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground?
Thy nest which thou canst drop into at will,
Those quivering wings composed, that music still!

To the last point of vision, and beyond
Mount, daring warbler!—that love-prompted strain
—'Twixt thee and thine a never-failing bond—
Thrills not the less the bosom of the plain;
Yet might'st thou seem, proud privilege! to sing
All independent of the leafy Spring.

Leave to the nightingale her shady wood;
A privacy of glorious light is thine,
Whence thou dost pour upon the world a flood
Of harmony, with instinct more divine;

Type of the wise, who soar, but never roam—
True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home.

W. Wordsworth

287

TO A SKYLARK

Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!
Bird thou never wert,
That from heaven, or near it
Pourest thy full heart
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.

Higher still and higher
From the earth thou springest,
Like a cloud of fire,
The blue deep thou wingest,
And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest.

In the golden lightning
Of the sunken sun
O'er which clouds are brightening,
Thou dost float and run,
Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun.

The pale purple even
Melts around thy flight;
Like a star of heaven
In the broad daylight
Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight:

Keen as are the arrows
Of that silver sphere,
Whose intense lamp narrows
In the white dawn clear
Until we hardly see, we feel that it is there.

All the earth and air
With thy voice is loud,
As, when night is bare,
From one lonely cloud
The moon rains out her beams, and heaven is overflow'd.

What thou art we know not;
What is most like thee?
From rainbow clouds there flow not
Drops so bright to see
As from thy presence showers a rain of melody;—

Like a poet hidden
In the light of thought,
Singing hymns unbidden,
Till the world is wrought
To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not:

Like a high-born maiden
In a palace tower,
Soothing her love-laden
Soul in secret hour
With music sweet as love, which overflows her bower:

Like a glow-worm golden
In a dell of dew,
Scattering unbeholden
Its aerial hue
Among the flowers and grass, which screen it from the view:

Like a rose embower'd
In its own green leaves,
By warm winds deflower'd,
Till the scent it gives
Makes faint with too much sweet these heavy-wingéd thieves.

Sound of vernal showers
On the twinkling grass,
Rain-awaken'd flowers,
All that ever was
Joyous, and clear, and fresh, thy music doth surpass.

Teach us, sprite or bird,
What sweet thoughts are thine:
I have never heard
Praise of love or wine
That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine.

Chorus hymeneal
Or triumphal chaunt
Match'd with thine, would be all
But an empty vaunt—
A thing wherein we feel there is some hidden want.

What objects are the fountains
Of thy happy strain?
What fields, or waves, or mountains?
What shapes of sky or plain?
What love of thine own kind? what ignorance of pain?

With thy clear keen joyance
Langour cannot be:
Shadow of annoyance
Never came near thee;
Thou lovest; but ne'er knew love's sad satiety.

Waking or asleep
Thou of death must deem
Things more true and deep
Than we mortals dream,
Or how could thy notes flow in such a crystal stream?

We look before and after,
And pine for what is not:
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.

Yet if we could scorn
Hate, and pride, and fear;
If we were things born
Not to shed a tear,
I know not how thy joy we ever should come near.

Better than all measures
Of delightful sound,
Better than all treasures
That in books are found,
Thy skill to poet were, thou scorner of the ground!

Teach me half the gladness
That thy brain must know,
Such harmonious madness
From my lips would flow,
The world should listen then, as I am listening now!

P. B. Shelley

288

THE GREEN LINNET

Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed
Their snow-white blossoms on my head,
With brightest sunshine round me spread
Of Spring's unclouded weather,
In this sequester'd nook how sweet
To sit upon my orchard-seat!
And flowers and birds once more to greet,
My last year's friends together.

One have I mark'd, the happiest guest
In all this covert of the blest:
Hail to Thee, far above the rest
In joy of voice and pinion!
Thou, Linnet! in thy green array
Presiding Spirit here to-day
Dost lead the revels of the May;
And this is thy dominion.

While birds, and butterflies, and flowers,
Make all one band of paramours,
Thou, ranging up and down the bowers,
Art sole in thy employment;
A Life, a Presence like the air,
Scattering thy gladness without care,
Too blest with any one to pair;
Thyself thy own enjoyment.

Amid yon tuft of hazel trees
That twinkle to the gusty breeze,
Behold him perch'd in ecstasies
Yet seeming still to hover;

There! where the flutter of his wings
Upon his back and body flings
Shadows and sunny glimmerings,
That cover him all over.

My dazzled sight he oft deceives—
A brother of the dancing leaves;
Then flits, and from the cottage-eaves
Pours forth his song in gushes;
As if by that exulting strain
He mock'd and treated with disdain
The voiceless Form he chose to feign,
While fluttering in the bushes.

W. Wordsworth

289

TO THE CUCKOO

O blithe new-comer! I have heard,
I hear thee and rejoice:
O Cuckoo! shall I call thee Bird,
Or but a wandering Voice?

While I am lying on the grass
Thy twofold shout I hear;
From hill to hill it seems to pass,
At once far off and near.

Though babbling only to the vale
Of sunshine and of flowers,
Thou bringest unto me a tale
Of visionary hours.

Thrice welcome, darling of the Spring!
Even yet thou art to me
No bird, but an invisible thing,
A voice, a mystery;

The same whom in my school-boy days
I listen'd to; that Cry
Which made me look a thousand ways
In bush, and tree, and sky.

To seek thee did I often rove
Through woods and on the green;
And thou wert still a hope, a love;
Still long'd for, never seen!

And I can listen to thee yet;
Can lie upon the plain
And listen, till I do beget
That golden time again.

O blesséd Bird! the earth we pace
Again appears to be
An unsubstantial, faery place,
That is fit home for Thee!

W. Wordsworth

290

ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE

My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains
  My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk,
Or emptied some dull opiate to the drains
  One minute past, and Lethe-wards had sunk:
'Tis not through envy of thy happy lot,
  But being too happy in thine happiness,—
    That thou, light-wingéd Dryad of the trees,
      In some melodious plot
  Of beechen green, and shadows numberless,
    Singest of summer in full-throated ease.

O, for a draught of vintage! that hath been
Cool'd a long age in the deep-delvéd earth,
Tasting of Flora and the country green,
Dance, and Provençal song, and sunburnt mirth!
O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim,
And purple-stainéd mouth;
That I might drink, and leave the world unseen,
And with thee fade away into the forest dim:

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other groan;
Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last gray hairs,
Where youth grows pale, and spectre-thin, and dies
Where but to think is to be full of sorrow
And leaden-eyed despairs;
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
Or new Love pine at them beyond to-morrow.

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards,
But on the viewless wings of Poesy,
Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
Already with thee! tender is the night,
And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
Cluster'd round by all her starry Fays;
But here there is no light,
Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown
Through verdurous glooms and winding mossy ways.

I cannot see what flowers are at my feet,
Nor what soft incense hangs upon the boughs,
But, in embalméd darkness, guess each sweet
Wherewith the seasonable month endows
The grass, the thicket, and the fruit-tree wild;
White hawthorn, and the pastoral eglantine;

Fast fading violets cover'd up in leaves;
And mid-May's eldest child,
The coming musk-rose, full of dewy wine,
The murmurous haunt of flies on summer eves.

Darkling I listen; and for many a time
I have been half in love with easeful Death,
Call'd him soft names in many a muséd rhyme,
To take into the air my quiet breath;
Now more than ever seems it rich to die,
To cease upon the midnight with no pain,
While thou art pouring forth thy soul abroad
In such an ecstasy!
Still wouldst thou sing, and I have ears in vain—
To thy high requiem become a sod.

Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!
No hungry generations tread thee down;
The voice I hear this passing night was heard
In ancient days by emperor and clown:
Perhaps the self-same song that found a path
Through the sad heart of Ruth, when, sick for home,
She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
The same that oft-times hath
Charm'd magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

Forlorn! the very word is like a bell
To toll me back from thee to my sole self!
Adieu! the fancy cannot cheat so well
As she is famed to do, deceiving elf.
Adieu! adieu! thy plaintive anthem fades
Past the near meadows, over the still stream,
Up the hill-side; and now 'tis buried deep
In the next valley-glades:
Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
Fled is that music:—Do I wake or sleep?

J. Keats

291

UPON WESTMINSTER BRIDGE, SEPT. 3, 1802

Earth has not anything to show more fair:
Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty:
This City now doth like a garment wear

The beauty of the morning: silent, bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky,—
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.

Never did sun more beautifully steep
In his first splendour valley, rock, or hill;
Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!

The river glideth at its own sweet will:
Dear God! the very houses seem asleep;
And all that mighty heart is lying still!

W. Wordsworth

292

To one who has been long in city pent,
'Tis very sweet to look into the fair
And open face of heaven,—to breathe a prayer
Full in the smile of the blue firmament.

Who is more happy, when, with heart's content,
Fatigued he sinks into some pleasant lair
Of wavy grass, and reads a debonair
And gentle tale of love and languishment?

Returning home at evening, with an ear
Catching the notes of Philomel,—an eye
Watching the sailing cloudlet's bright career,

He mourns that day so soon has glided by:
E'en like the passage of an angel's tear
That falls through the clear ether silently.

J. Keats

293

OZYMANDIAS OF EGYPT

I met a traveller from an antique land
Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
Stand in the desert. Near them on the sand,
Half sunk, a shatter'd visage lies, whose frown
And wrinkled lip and sneer of cold command
Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
Which yet survive, stamp'd on these lifeless things,
The hand that mock'd them and the heart that fed;
And on the pedestal these words appear:
'My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
Look on my work, ye Mighty, and despair!'
Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
The lone and level sands stretch far away.

P. B. Shelley

294

COMPOSED AT NEIDPATH CASTLE, THE PROPERTY OF LORD QUEENSBERRY, 1803

Degenerate Douglas! oh, the unworthy lord!
Whom mere despite of heart could so far please
And love of havoc, (for with such disease Fame taxes him,) that he could send forth word

To level with the dust a noble horde,
A brotherhood of venerable trees,
Leaving an ancient dome, and towers like these,
Beggar'd and outraged!—Many hearts deplored

The fate of those old trees; and oft with pain
The traveller at this day will stop and gaze
On wrongs, which Nature scarcely seems to heed:

For shelter'd places, bosoms, nooks, and bays,
And the pure mountains, and the gentle Tweed,
And the green silent pastures, yet remain.

W. Wordsworth

295

THE BEECH TREE'S PETITION

O leave this barren spot to me!
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!
Though bush or floweret never grow
My dark unwarming shade below;
Nor summer bud perfume the dew
Of rosy blush, or yellow hue;
Nor fruits of autumn, blossom-born,
My green and glossy leaves adorn;
Nor murmuring tribes from me derive
Th' ambrosial amber of the hive;
Yet leave this barren spot to me:
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!

Thrice twenty summers I have seen
The sky grow bright, the forest green;
And many a wintry wind have stood
In bloomless, fruitless solitude,
Since childhood in my pleasant bower
First spent its sweet and sportive hour;
Since youthful lovers in my shade
Their vows of truth and rapture made,
And on my trunk's surviving frame
Carved many a long-forgotten name.
Oh! by the sighs of gentle sound,
First breathed upon this sacred ground;
By all that Love has whisper'd here,
Or Beauty heard with ravish'd ear;
As Love's own altar honour me;
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree!

T. Campbell

296

ADMONITION TO A TRAVELLER

Yes, there is holy pleasure in thine eye!
—The lovely Cottage in the guardian nook
Hath stirr'd thee deeply; with its own dear brook,
Its own small pasture, almost its own sky!

But covet not the abode; forbear to sigh
As many do, repining while they look;
Intruders—who would tear from Nature's book
This precious leaf with harsh impiety.

—Think what the home must be if it were thine,
Even thine, though few thy wants!—Roof, window, door,
The very flowers are sacred to the Poor,

The roses to the porch which they entwine:
Yea, all that now enchants thee, from the day
On which it should be touch'd, would melt away!

W. Wordsworth

297

TO THE HIGHLAND GIRL OF INVERSNEYDE

Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower
Of beauty is thy earthly dower!
Twice seven consenting years have shed
Their utmost bounty on thy head:
And these gray rocks, that household lawn,
Those trees—a veil just half withdrawn,
This fall of water that doth make
A murmur near the silent lake,
This little bay, a quiet road
That holds in shelter thy abode;
In truth together ye do seem
Like something fashion'd in a dream;
Such forms as from their covert peep
When earthly cares are laid asleep!

But O fair Creature! in the light
Of common day, so heavenly bright,
I bless Thee, Vision as thou art,
I bless thee with a human heart:
God shield thee to thy lastest years!
Thee neither know I nor thy peers:
And yet my eyes are fill'd with tears.

With earnest feeling I shall pray
For thee when I am far away;
For never saw I mien or face
In which more plainly I could trace
Benignity and home-bred sense
Ripening in perfect innocence.
Here scatter'd, like a random seed,
Remote from men, Thou dost not need
The embarrass'd look of shy distress,
And maidenly shamefacédness:
Thou wear'st upon thy forehead clear
The freedom of a Mountaineer:
A face with gladness overspread;
Soft smiles, by human kindness bred;
And seemliness complete, that sways
Thy courtesies, about thee plays;
With no restraint, but such as springs
From quick and eager visitings
Of thoughts that lie beyond the reach
Of thy few words of English speech:
A bondage sweetly brook'd, a strife
That gives thy gestures grace and life!
So have I, not unmoved in mind,
Seen birds of tempest-loving kind—
Thus beating up against the wind.

What hand but would a garland cull
For thee who art so beautiful?
O happy pleasure! here to dwell
Beside thee in some heathy dell;
Adopt your homely ways, and dress,
A shepherd, thou a shepherdess!

But I could frame a wish for thee
More like a grave reality:
Thou art to me but as a wave
Of the wild sea: and I would have
Some claim upon thee, if I could,
Though but of common neighborhood.
What joy to hear thee, and to see!
Thy elder brother I would be,
Thy father—anything to thee.

Now thanks to Heaven! that of its grace
Hath led me to this lonely place:
Joy have I had; and going hence
I bear away my recompence.
In spots like these it is we prize
Our Memory, feel that she hath eyes:
Then why should I be loth to stir?
I feel this place was made for her;
To give new pleasure like the past,
Continued long as life shall last.
Nor am I loth, though pleased at heart,
Sweet Highland Girl! from thee to part;
For I, methinks, till I grow old
As fair before me shall behold
As I do now, the cabin small,
The lake, the bay, the waterfall;
And Thee, the Spirit of them all!

W. Wordsworth

298

THE REAPER

Behold her, single in the field,
Yon solitary Highland Lass!
Reaping and singing by herself;
Stop here, or gently pass!
Alone she cuts and binds the grain,
And sings a melancholy strain;
O listen! for the vale profound
Is overflowing with the sound.

No nightingale did ever chaunt
More welcome notes to weary bands
Of travellers in some shady haunt,
Among Arabian sands:
A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
In spring-time from the cuckoo-bird,
Breaking the silence of the seas
Among the farthest Hebrides.

Will no one tell me what she sings?
Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
For old, unhappy, far-off things,
And battles long ago:
Or is it some more humble lay,
Familiar matter of to-day?
Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
That has been, and may be again!

Whate'er the theme, the maiden sang
As if her song could have no ending;
I saw her singing at her work,
And o'er the sickle bending;—
I listen'd, motionless and still;
And, as I mounted up the hill,
The music in my heart I bore
Long after it was heard no more.

W. Wordsworth

299

THE REVERIE OF POOR SUSAN

At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears,
Hangs a Thrush that sings loud, it has sung for three years:
Poor Susan has pass'd by the spot, and has heard
In the silence of morning the song of the bird.

'Tis a note of enchantment; what ails her? She sees
A mountain ascending, a vision of trees;
Bright volumes of vapour through Lothbury glide,
And a river flows on through the vale of Cheapside.

Green pastures she views in the midst of the dale
Down which she so often has tripp'd with her pail;
And a single small cottage, a nest like a dove's,
The one only dwelling on earth that she loves.

She looks, and her heart is in heaven: but they fade,
The mist and the river, the hill and the shade;
The stream will not flow, and the hill will not rise,
And the colours have all pass'd away from her eyes!

W. Wordsworth

300

TO A LADY, WITH A GUITAR

Ariel to Miranda:—Take
This slave of music, for the sake
Of him, who is the slave of thee;
And teach it all the harmony
In which thou canst, and only thou,
Make the delighted spirit glow,
Till joy denies itself again
And, too intense, is turn'd to pain.
For by permission and command
Of thine own Prince Ferdinand,
Poor Ariel sends this silent token
Of more than ever can be spoken;
Your guardian spirit, Ariel, who
From life to life must still pursue
Your happiness, for thus alone
Can Ariel ever find his own.
From Prospero's enchanted cell,
As the mighty verses tell,
To the throne of Naples he
Lit you o'er the trackless sea,
Flitting on, your prow before,
Like a living meteor.
When you die, the silent Moon
In her interlunar swoon
Is not sadder in her cell
Than deserted Ariel:—

When you live again on earth,
Like an unseen Star of birth
Ariel guides you o'er the sea
Of life from your nativity:—
Many changes have been run
Since Ferdinand and you begun
Your course of love, and Ariel still
Has track'd your steps and served your will.
Now in humbler, happier lot,
This is all remembered not;
And now, alas! the poor Sprite is Imprison'd for some fault of his
In a body like a grave—
From you he only dares to crave,
For his service and his sorrow
A smile to-day, a song to-morrow.

The artist who this idol wrought
To echo all harmonious thought,
Fell'd a tree, while on the steep
The woods were in their winter sleep,
Rock'd in that repose divine
On the wind-swept Apennine;
And dreaming, some of Autumn past,
And some of Spring approaching fast,
And some of April buds and showers,
And some of songs in July bowers,
And all of love: And so this tree,—
Oh that such our death may be!—
Died in sleep, and felt no pain,
To live in happier form again:
From which, beneath heaven's fairest star,
The artist wrought this loved Guitar;
And taught it justly to reply
To all who question skilfully
In language gentle as thine own;
Whispering in enamour'd tone
Sweet oracles of woods and dells,
And summer winds in sylvan cells:

—For it had learnt all harmonies
Of the plains and of the skies,
Of the forests and the mountains,
And the many-voicéd fountains;
The clearest echoes of the hills,
The softest notes of falling rills,
The melodies of birds and bees,
The murmuring of summer seas,
And pattering rain, and breathing dew,
And airs of evening; and it knew
That seldom-heard mysterious sound
Which, driven on its diurnal round,
As it floats through boundless day,
Our world enkindles on its way:
—All this it knows, but will not tell
To those who cannot question well
The Spirit that inhabits it;
It talks according to the wit
Of its companions; and no more
Is heard than has been felt before
By those who tempt it to betray
These secrets of an elder day.
But, sweetly as it answers will
Flatter hands of perfect skill.
It keeps its highest holiest tone
For our beloved Friend alone.

P. B. Shelley

301

THE DAFFODILS

I wander'd lonely as a cloud
That floats on high o'er vales and hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd,
A host of golden daffodils,
Beside the lake, beneath the trees,
Fluttering and dancing in the breeze.

Continuous as the stars that shine
And twinkle on the milky way.
They stretch'd in never-ending line
Along the margin of a bay:
Ten thousand saw I at a glance
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

The waves beside them danced, but they
Out-did the sparkling waves in glee:—
A Poet could not but be gay
In such a jocund company!
I gazed—and gazed—but little thought
What wealth the show to me had brought;

For oft, when on my couch I lie
In vacant or in pensive mood,
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude;
And then my heart with pleasure fills,
And dances with the daffodils.

W. Wordsworth

302

TO THE DAISY

With little here to do or see
Of things that in the great world lie,
Sweet Daisy! oft I talk to thee
For thou art worthy,
Thou unassuming Common-place
Of Nature, with that homely face,
And yet with something of a grace
Which Love makes for thee!

Oft on the dappled turf at ease
I sit and play with similes,
Loose types of things through all degrees,
Thoughts of thy raising;

And many a fond and idle name
I give to thee, for praise or blame
As is the humour of the game,
While I am gazing.

A nun demure, of lowly port;
Or sprightly maiden, of Love's court,
In thy simplicity the sport
Of all temptations;
A queen in crown of rubies drest;
A starveling in a scanty vest;
Are all, as seems to suit thee best,
Thy appellations.

A little Cyclops, with one eye
Staring to threaten and defy,
That thought comes next—and instantly
The freak is over,
The shape will vanish, and behold!
A silver shield with boss of gold
That spreads itself, some faery bold
In fight to cover.

I see thee glittering from afar—
And then thou art a pretty star,
Not quite so fair as many are
In heaven above thee!
Yet like a star, with glittering crest,
Self-poised in air thou seem'st to rest;—
May peace come never to his nest
Who shall reprove thee!

Sweet Flower! for by that name at last
When all my reveries are past
I call thee, and to that cleave fast,
Sweet silent Creature!
That breath'st with me in sun and air,
Do thou, as thou art wont, repair
My heart with gladness, and a share
Of thy meek nature!

W. Wordsworth

303

ODE TO AUTUMN

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
To bend with apples the moss'd cottage-trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease;
For Summer has o'erbrimm'd their clammy cells.

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy store?
Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing wind;
Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep,
Drowsed with the fume of poppies, while thy hook
Spares the next swath and all its twinéd flowers:
And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep
Steady thy laden head across a brook;
Or by a cyder-press, with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozings, hours by hours.

Where are the songs of Spring? Ay, where are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music too,—
While barréd clouds bloom the soft-dying day
And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn
Among the river-sallows, borne aloft
Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly bourn;
Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The red-breast whistles from a garden-croft;
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.

J. Keats

304

ODE TO WINTER

Germany, December, 1800

When first the fiery-mantled Sun
His heavenly race began to run,
Round the earth and ocean blue
His children four the Seasons flew.
  First, in green apparel dancing,
The young Spring smiled with angel-grace;
  Rosy Summer next advancing,
Rush'd into her sire's embrace—
Her bright-hair'd sire, who bade her keep
  For ever nearest to his smiles,
On Calpe's olive-shaded steep
  Or India's citron-cover'd isles:
More remote, and buxom-brown,
  The Queen of vintage bow'd before his throne:
A rich pomegranate gemm'd her crown,
  A ripe sheaf bound her zone.

But howling Winter fled afar
To hills that prop the polar star;
And loves on deer-borne car to ride
With barren darkness by his side,
Round the shore where loud Lofoden
  Whirls to death the roaring whale,
Round the hall where Runic Odin
  Howls his war-song to the gale;
Save when adown the ravaged globe
  He travels on his native storm,
Deflowering Nature's grassy robe
  And trampling on her faded form:—
Till light's returning Lord assume
  The shaft that drives him to his polar field,
Of power to pierce his raven plume
  And crystal-cover'd shield.

Oh, sire of storms! whose savage ear
The Lapland drum delights to hear,

When Frenzy with her blood-shot eye
Implores thy dreadful deity—
Archangel! Power of desolation!
  Fast descending as thou art,
Say, hath mortal invocation
  Spells to touch thy stormy heart?
Then, sullen Winter! hear my prayer,
And gently rule the ruin'd year;
Nor chill the wanderer's bosom bare
Nor freeze the wretch's falling tear:
To shuddering Want's unmantled bed
  Thy horror-breathing agues cease to lend,
And gently on the orphan head
  Of Innocence descend.

But chiefly spare, O king of clouds!
The sailor on his airy shrouds,
When wrecks and beacons strew the steep,
And spectres walk along the deep.
Milder yet thy snowy breezes
  Pour on yonder tented shores,
Where the Rhine's broad billow freezes,
  Or the dark-brown Danube roars.
Oh, winds of Winter! list ye there
  To many a deep and dying groan?
Or start, ye demons of the midnight air,
  At shrieks and thunders louder than your own?
Alas! ev'n your unhallow'd breath
  May spare the victim fallen low;
But Man will ask no truce to death,—
  No bounds to human woe.

T. Campbell

305

YARROW UNVISITED

1803

From Stirling Castle we had seen
The mazy Forth unravell'd,
Had trod the banks of Clyde and Tay
And with the Tweed had travell'd;

And when we came to Clovenford,
Then said my 'winsome Marrow,'
'Whate'er betide, we'll turn aside,
And see the Braes of Yarrow.'

'Let Yarrow folk, frae Selkirk town,
Who have been buying, selling,
Go back to Yarrow, 'tis their own,
Each maiden to her dwelling!
On Yarrow's banks let herons feed,
Hares couch, and rabbits burrow;
But we will downward with the Tweed,
Nor turn aside to Yarrow.

'There's Gala Water, Leader Haughs,
Both lying right before us;
And Dryburgh, where with chiming Tweed
The lintwhites sing in chorus;
There's pleasant Tiviot-dale, a land
Made blithe with plough and harrow:
Why throw away a needful day
To go in search of Yarrow?

'What's Yarrow but a river bare
That glides the dark hills under?
There are a thousand such elsewhere
As worthy of your wonder.'
—Strange words they seem'd of slight and scorn;
My True-love sigh'd for sorrow,
And look'd me in the face, to think
I thus could speak of Yarrow!

'O green,' said I, 'are Yarrow's holms,
And sweet is Yarrow flowing!
Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,
But we will leave it growing.
O'er hilly path and open strath
We'll wander Scotland thorough;
But, though so near, we will not turn
Into the dale of Yarrow.

'Let beeves and home-bred kine partake
The sweets of Burn-mill meadow;
The swan on still Saint Mary's Lake
Float double, swan and shadow!
We will not see them; will not go
To-day, nor yet to-morrow;
Enough if in our hearts we know
There's such a place as Yarrow.

'Be Yarrow stream unseen, unknown!
It must, or we shall rue it:
We have a vision of our own,
Ah! why should we undo it?
The treasured dreams of times long past,
We'll keep them, winsome Marrow!
For when we're there, although 'tis fair,
'Twill be another Yarrow!

'If Care with freezing years should come
And wandering seem but folly,—
Should we be loth to stir from home,
And yet be melancholy;
Should life be dull, and spirits low,
'Twill soothe us in our sorrow
That earth has something yet to show,
The bonny holms of Yarrow!'

W. Wordsworth

306

YARROW VISITED
September, 1814

And is this—Yarrow?—This the stream
Of which my fancy cherish'd
So faithfully, a waking dream,
An image that hath perish'd?
O that some minstrel's harp were near
To utter notes of gladness
And chase this silence from the air,
That fills my heart with sadness!

Yet why?—a silvery current flows
With uncontroll'd meanderings;
Nor have these eyes by greener hills
Been soothed, in all my wanderings.
And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake
Is visibly delighted;
For not a feature of those hills
Is in the mirror slighted.

A blue sky bends o'er Yarrow Vale,
Save where that pearly whiteness
Is round the rising sun diffused,
A tender hazy brightness;
Mild dawn of promise! that excludes
All profitless dejection;
Though not unwilling here to admit
A pensive recollection.

Where was it that the famous Flower
Of Yarrow Vale lay bleeding?
His bed perchance was yon smooth mound
On which the herd is feeding:
And haply from this crystal pool,
Now peaceful as the morning,
The Water-wraith ascended thrice,
And gave his doleful warning.

Delicious is the lay that sings
The haunts of happy lovers,
The path that leads them to the grove,
The leafy grove that covers:
And pity sanctifies the verse
That paints, by strength of sorrow,
The unconquerable strength of love;
Bear witness, rueful Yarrow!

But thou that didst appear so fair
To fond imagination,
Dost rival in the light of day
Her delicate creation:

Meek loveliness is round thee spread,
A softness still and holy:
The grace of forest charms decay'd,
And pastoral melancholy.

That region left, the vale unfolds
Rich groves of lofty stature,
With Yarrow winding through the pomp
Of cultivated nature;
And rising from those lofty groves
Behold a ruin hoary,
The shatter'd front of Newark's towers,
Renown'd in Border story.

Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom,
For sportive youth to stray in,
For manhood to enjoy his strength,
And age to wear away in!
Yon cottage seems a bower of bliss,
A covert for protection
Of tender thoughts that nestle there—
The brood of chaste affection.

How sweet on this autumnal day
The wild-wood fruits to gather,
And on my True-love's forehead plant
A crest of blooming heather!
And what if I enwreathed my own?
'Twere no offence to reason;
The sober hills thus deck their brows
To meet the wintry season.

I see—but not by sight alone,
Loved Yarrow, have I won thee;
A ray of Fancy still survives—
Her sunshine plays upon thee!
Thy ever-youthful waters keep
A course of lively pleasure;
And gladsome notes my lips can breathe
Accordant to the measure.

The vapours linger round the heights,
They melt, and soon must vanish;
One hour is theirs, nor more is mine—
Sad thought! which I would banish,
But that I know, where'er I go,
Thy genuine image, Yarrow!
Will dwell with me, to heighten joy,
And cheer my mind in sorrow.

W. Wordsworth.

307

THE INVITATION

Best and brightest, come away,—
Fairer far than this fair Day,
Which, like thee, to those in sorrow
Comes to bid a sweet good-morrow
To the rough year just awake
In its cradle on the brake.
The brightest hour of unborn Spring
Through the winter wandering,
Found, it seems, the halcyon morn
To hoar February born;
Bending from heaven, in azure mirth,
It kiss'd the forehead of the earth,
And smiled upon the silent sea,
And bade the frozen streams be free,
And waked to music all their fountains,
And breathed upon the frozen mountains,
And like a prophetess of May
Strew'd flowers upon the barren way.
Making the wintry world appear
Like one on whom thou smilest, dear.

Away, away, from men and towns,
To the wild wood and the downs—

To the silent wilderness
Where the soul need not repress
Its music, lest it should not find
An echo in another's mind,
While the touch of Nature's art
Harmonizes heart to heart.

Radiant Sister of the Day
Awake! arise! and come away!
To the wild woods and the plains,
To the pools where winter rains
Image all their roof of leaves,
Where the pine its garland weaves
Of sapless green, and ivy dun,
Round stems that never kiss the sun;
Where the lawns and pastures be
And the sandhills of the sea;
Where the melting hoar-frost wets
The daisy-star that never sets,
And wind-flowers and violets
Which yet join not scent to hue
Crown the pale year weak and new;
When the night is left behind
In the deep east, dim and blind,
And the blue noon is over us,
And the multitudinous
Billows murmur at our feet,
Where the earth and ocean meet,
And all things seem only one
In the universal Sun.

P. B. Shelley

308

THE RECOLLECTION

Now the last day of many days
All beautiful and bright as thou,
The loveliest and the last, is dead:
Rise, Memory, and write its praise!

Up—to thy wonted work! come, trace
The epitaph of glory fled,
For now the earth has changed its face,
A frown is on the heaven's brow.

We wander'd to the Pine Forest
That skirts the Ocean's foam;
The lightest wind was in its nest,
The tempest in its home.
The whispering waves were half asleep,
The clouds were gone to play,
And on the bosom of the deep
The smile of heaven lay;
It seem'd as if the hour were one
Sent from beyond the skies
Which scatter'd from above the sun
A light of Paradise!

We paused amid the pines that stood
The giants of the waste,
Tortured by storms to shapes as rude
As serpents interlaced,—
And soothed by every azure breath
That under heaven is blown,
To harmonies and hues beneath,
As tender as its own:
Now all the tree-tops lay asleep
Like green waves on the sea,
As still as in the silent deep
The ocean-woods may be.

How calm it was!—The silence there
By such a chain was bound,
That even the busy woodpecker
Made stiller with her sound
The inviolable quietness;
The breath of peace we drew
With its soft motion made not less
The calm that round us grew.

There seem'd, from the remotest seat
  Of the white mountain waste
To the soft flower beneath our feet,
  A magic circle traced,—
A spirit interfused around,
  A thrilling silent life;
To momentary peace it bound
  Our mortal nature's strife;—
And still I felt the centre of
  The magic circle there
Was one fair form that fill'd with love
  The lifeless atmosphere.

We paused beside the pools that lie
  Under the forest bough;
Each seem'd as 'twere a little sky
  Gulf'd in a world below;
A firmament of purple light
  Which in the dark earth lay,
More boundless than the depth of night
  And purer than the day—
In which the lovely forest grew
  As in the upper air,
More perfect both in shape and hue
  Than any spreading there.

There lay the glade and neighbouring lawn,
  And through the dark-green wood
The white sun twinkling like the dawn
  Out of a speckled cloud.
Sweet views which in our world above
  Can never well be seen
Were imaged in the water's love
  Of that fair forest green:
And all was interfused beneath
  With an Elysian glow,
An atmosphere without a breath,
  A softer day below.

Like one beloved, the scene had lent
To the dark water's breast
Its every leaf and lineament
With more than truth exprest;
Until an envious wind crept by,
Like an unwelcome thought
Which from the mind's too faithful eye
Blots one dear image out.
—Though thou art ever fair and kind,
The forests ever green,
Less oft is peace in Shelley's mind
Than calm in waters seen!

P. B. Shelley

309

BY THE SEA

It is a beauteous evening, calm and free;
The holy time is quiet as a Nun
Breathless with adoration; the broad sun
Is sinking down in its tranquillity;

The gentleness of heaven is on the Sea:
Listen! the mighty Being is awake,
And doth with his eternal motion make
A sound like thunder—everlastingly.

Dear child! dear girl! that walkest with me here,
If thou appear untouch'd by solemn thought
Thy nature is not therefore less divine:

Thou liest in Abraham's bosom all the year,
And worshipp'st at the Temple's inner shrine,
God being with thee when we know it not.

W. Wordsworth

310

SONG TO THE EVENING STAR

Star that bringest home the bee
And sett'st the weary labourer free!
If any star shed peace, 'tis Thou
That send'st it from above,
Appearing when Heaven's breath and brow
Are sweet as hers we love.

Come to the luxuriant skies,
Whilst the landscape's odours rise,
Whilst far-off lowing herds are heard
And songs when toil is done,
From cottages whose smoke unstirr'd
Curls yellow in the sun.

Star of love's soft interviews,
Parted lovers on thee muse;
Their remembrancer in Heaven
Of thrilling vows thou art,
Too delicious to be riven
By absence from the heart.

T. Campbell

311

DATUR HORA QUIETI

The sun upon the lake is low,
The wild birds hush their song,
The hills have evening's deepest glow,
Yet Leonard tarries long.
Now all whom varied toil and care
From home and love divide,
In the calm sunset may repair
Each to the loved one's side.

The noble dame, on turret high,
Who waits her gallant knight,
Looks to the western beam to spy
The flash of armour bright.

The village maid, with hand on brow
The level ray to shade,
Upon the footpath watches now
For Colin's darkening plaid.

Now to their mates the wild swans row,
By day they swam apart,
And to the thicket wanders slow
The hind beside the hart.
The woodlark at his partner's side
Twitters his closing song—
All meet whom day and care divide,
But Leonard tarries long!

Sir W. Scott

312

TO THE MOON

Art thou pale for weariness
Of climbing heaven, and gazing on the earth,
Wandering companionless
Among the stars that have a different birth,—
And ever-changing, like a joyless eye
That finds no object worth its constancy?

P. B. Shelley

313

TO SLEEP

A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by
One after one; the sound of rain, and bees
Murmuring; the fall of rivers, winds and seas,
Smooth fields, white sheets of water, and pure sky;

I've thought of all by turns, and yet do lie
Sleepless; and soon the small birds' melodies
Must hear, first utter'd from my orchard trees,
And the first cuckoo's melancholy cry.

Even thus last night, and two nights more I lay,
And could not win thee, Sleep! by any stealth:
So do not let me wear to-night away:

Without Thee what is all the morning's wealth?
Come, blesséd barrier between day and day,
Dear mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health!

W. Wordsworth

314

THE SOLDIER'S DREAM

Our bugles sang truce, for the night-cloud had lower'd,
And the sentinel stars set their watch in the sky;
And thousands had sunk on the ground overpower'd,
The weary to sleep, and the wounded to die.

When reposing that night on my pallet of straw
By the wolf-scaring faggot that guarded the slain,
At the dead of the night a sweet Vision I saw;
And thrice ere the morning I dreamt it again.

Methought from the battle-field's dreadful array
Far, far, I had roam'd on a desolate track:
'Twas Autumn,—and sunshine arose on the way
To the home of my fathers, that welcomed me back.

I flew to the pleasant fields traversed so oft
In life's morning march, when my bosom was young;
I heard my own mountain-goats bleating aloft,
And knew the sweet strain that the corn-reapers sung.

Then pledged we the wine-cup, and fondly I swore
From my home and my weeping friends never to part;
My little ones kiss'd me a thousand times o'er,
And my wife sobb'd aloud in her fulness of heart.

'Stay—stay with us!—rest!—thou art weary and worn!'—
And fain was their war-broken soldier to stay;—
But sorrow return'd with the dawning of morn,
And the voice in my dreaming ear melted away.

T. Campbell

315

A DREAM OF THE UNKNOWN

I dream'd that as I wander'd by the way
Bare Winter suddenly was changed to Spring,
And gentle odours led my steps astray,
Mix'd with a sound of waters murmuring
Along a shelving bank of turf, which lay
Under a copse, and hardly dared to fling
Its green arms round the bosom of the stream,
But kiss'd it and then fled, as Thou mightest in dream.

There grew pied wind-flowers and violets,
Daisies, those pearl'd Arcturi of the earth,
The constellated flower that never sets;
Faint oxlips; tender blue-bells, at whose birth
The sod scarce heaved; and that tall flower that wets
Its mother's face with heaven-collected tears,
When the low wind, its playmate's voice, it hears.

And in the warm hedge grew lush eglantine,
Green cow-bind and the moonlight-colour'd May,
And cherry-blossoms, and white cups, whose wine
Was the bright dew yet drain'd not by the day;
And wild roses, and ivy serpentine
With its dark buds and leaves, wandering astray;
And flowers azure, black, and streak'd with gold,
Fairer than any awaken'd eyes behold.

And nearer to the river's trembling edge
There grew broad flag-flowers, purple prank'd with white,
And starry river-buds among the sedge,
And floating water-lilies, broad and bright,

Which lit the oak that overhung the hedge
With moonlight beams of their own watery light;
And bulrushes, and reeds of such deep green
As soothed the dazzled eye with sober sheen.

Methought that of these visionary flowers
I made a nosegay, bound in such a way
That the same hues, which in their natural bowers
Were mingled or opposed, the like array
Kept these imprison'd children of the Hours
Within my hand,—and then, elate and gay,
I hastened to the spot whence I had come
That I might there present it—O! to Whom?

P. B. Shelley

316

KUBLA KHAN

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree:
Where Alph, the sacred river, ran
Through caverns measureless to man
Down to a sunless sea,
So twice five miles of fertile ground
With walls and towers were girdled round:
And there were gardens bright with sinuous rills
Where blossom'd many an incense-bearing tree;
And here were forests ancient as the hills,
Enfolding sunny spots of greenery.

But oh! that deep romantic chasm which slanted
Down the green hill athwart a cedarn cover!
A savage place! as holy and enchanted
As e'er beneath a waning moon was haunted
By woman wailing for her demon-lover!
And from this chasm, with ceaseless turmoil seething,
As if this earth in fast thick pants were breathing,
A mighty fountain momently was forced:

Amid whose swift half-intermitted burst
Huge fragments vaulted like rebounding hail,
Or chaffy grain beneath the thresher's flail:
And mid these dancing rocks at once and ever
It flung up momently the sacred river.
Five miles meandering with a mazy motion
Through wood and dale the sacred river ran,
Then reach'd the caverns measureless to man,
And sank in tumult to a lifeless ocean:
And 'mid this tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war!

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device,
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!
A damsel with a dulcimer
In a vision once I saw:
It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she play'd,
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her symphony and song,
To such a deep delight 'twould win me
That with music loud and long,
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
And all who heard should see them there,
And all should cry, Beware! Beware!
His flashing eyes, his floating hair!
Weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread,
For he on honey-dew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of Paradise.

S. T. Coleridge

317

THE INNER VISION

Most sweet it is with unuplifted eyes
To pace the ground, if path be there or none,
While a fair region round the traveller lies
Which he forbears again to look upon;

Pleased rather with some soft ideal scene,
The work of Fancy, or some happy tone
Of meditation, slipping in between
The beauty coming and the beauty gone.

—If Thought and Love desert us, from that day
Let us break off all commerce with the Muse:
With Thought and Love companions of our way—

Whate'er the senses take or may refuse,—
The Mind's internal heaven shall shed her dews
Of inspiration on the humblest lay.

W. Wordsworth

318

THE REALM OF FANCY

Ever let the Fancy roam;
Pleasure never is at home:
At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth,
Like to bubbles when rain pelteth;
Then let wingéd Fancy wander
Through the thought still spread beyond her:
Open wide the mind's cage-door,
She'll dart forth, and cloudward soar.
O sweet Fancy! let her loose;
Summer's joys are spoilt by use,
And the enjoying of the Spring
Fades as does its blossoming;
Autumn's red-lipp'd fruitage too,
Blushing through the mist and dew,
Cloys with tasting: What do then?

Sit thee by the ingle, when
The sear faggot blazes bright,
Spirit of a winter's night;
When the soundless earth is muffled,
And the cakéd snow is shuffled
From the ploughboy's heavy shoon;
When the Night doth meet the Noon
In a dark conspiracy
To banish Even from her sky.
Sit thee there, and send abroad,
With a mind self-overaw'd,
Fancy, high-commission'd:—send her!
She has vassals to attend her:
She will bring, in spite of frost,
Beauties that the earth hath lost;
She will bring thee, all together,
All delights of summer weather;
All the buds and bells of May,
From dewy sward or thorny spray;
All the heapéd Autumn's wealth,
With a still, mysterious stealth:
She will mix these pleasures up
Like three fit wines in a cup,
And thou shalt quaff it:—thou shalt hear
Distant harvest-carols clear;
Rustle of the reapéd corn;
Sweet birds antheming the morn:
And, in the same moment—hark!
'Tis the early April lark,
Or the rooks, with busy caw,
Foraging for sticks and straw.
Thou shalt, at one glance, behold
The daisy and the marigold;
White-plumed lilies, and the first
Hedge-grown primrose that hath burst;
Shaded hyacinth, alway
Sapphire queen of the mid-May;
And every leaf, and every flower
Pearléd with the self-same shower.

Thou shalt see the field-mouse peep
Meagre from its celléd sleep;
And the snake all winter-thin
Cast on sunny bank its skin;
Freckled nest-eggs thou shalt see
Hatching in the hawthorn-tree,
When the hen-bird's wing doth rest
Quiet on her mossy nest;
Then the hurry and alarm
When the bee-hive casts its swarm;
Acorns ripe down-pattering,
While the autumn breezes sing.

Oh, sweet Fancy! let her loose;
Everything is spoilt by use:
Where's the cheek that doth not fade,
Too much gazed at? Where's the maid
Whose lip mature is ever new?
Where's the eye, however blue,
Doth not weary? Where's the face
One would meet in every place?
Where's the voice, however soft,
One would hear so very oft?
At a touch sweet Pleasure melteth
Like to bubbles when rain pelteth.
Let then wingéd Fancy find
Thee a mistress to thy mind:
Dulcet-eyed as Ceres' daughter,
Ere the God of Torment taught her
How to frown and how to chide;
With a waist and with a side
White as Hebe's, when her zone
Slipt its golden clasp, and down
Fell her kirtle to her feet,
While she held the goblet sweet,
And Jove grew languid.—Break the mesh
Of the Fancy's silken leash;
Quickly break her prison-string,
And such joys as these she'll bring.

—Let the wingéd Fancy roam,
Pleasure never is at home.

J. Keats

319

WRITTEN IN EARLY SPRING

I heard a thousand blended notes
While in a grove I sate reclined,
In that sweet mood when pleasant thoughts
Bring sad thoughts to the mind.

To her fair works did Nature link
The human soul that through me ran;
And much it grieved my heart to think
What Man has made of Man.

Through primrose tufts, in that sweet bower,
The periwinkle trail'd its wreaths;
And 'tis my faith that every flower
Enjoys the air it breathes.

The birds around me hopp'd and play'd,
Their thoughts I cannot measure,—
But the least motion which they made
It seem'd a thrill of pleasure.

The budding twigs spread out their fan
To catch the breezy air;
And I must think, do all I can,
That there was pleasure there.

If this belief from heaven be sent,
If such be Nature's holy plan,
Have I not reason to lament
What Man has made of Man?

W. Wordsworth

320

RUTH: OR THE INFLUENCES OF NATURE

When Ruth was left half desolate
Her father took another mate;
And Ruth, not seven years old,
A slighted child, at her own will
Went wandering over dale and hill,
In thoughtless freedom, bold.

And she had made a pipe of straw,
And music from that pipe could draw
Like sounds of winds and floods;
Had built a bower upon the green,
As if she from her birth had been
An infant of the woods.

Beneath her father's roof, alone
She seem'd to live; her thoughts her own;
Herself her own delight:
Pleased with herself, nor sad nor gay;
And passing thus the live-long day,
She grew to woman's height.

There came a youth from Georgia's shore—
A military casque he wore
With splendid feathers drest;
He brought them from the Cherokees;
The feathers nodded in the breeze
And made a gallant crest.

From Indian blood you deem him sprung:
But no! he spake the English tongue
And bore a soldier's name;
And, when America was free
From battle and from jeopardy,
He 'cross the ocean came.

With hues of genius on his cheek,
In finest tones the youth could speak:
—While he was yet a boy
The moon, the glory of the sun,
The streams that murmur as they run
Had been his dearest joy.

He was a lovely youth! I guess
The panther in the wilderness
Was not so fair as he;
And when he chose to sport and play,
No dolphin ever was so gay
Upon the tropic sea.

Among the Indians he had fought;
And with him many tales he brought
Of pleasure and of fear;
Such tales as, told to any maid
By such a youth, in the green shade,
Were perilous to hear.

He told of girls, a happy rout!
Who quit their fold with dance and shout,
Their pleasant Indian town,
To gather strawberries all day long;
Returning with a choral song
When daylight is gone down.

He spake of plants that hourly change
Their blossoms, through a boundless range
Of intermingling hues;
With budding, fading, faded flowers,
They stand the wonder of the bowers
From morn to evening dews.

He told of the magnolia, spread
High as a cloud, high over head!
The cypress and her spire;
—Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
To set the hills on fire.

The youth of green savannahs spake,
And many an endless, endless lake
With all its fairy crowds
Of islands, that together lie
As quietly as spots of sky
Among the evening clouds.

'How pleasant,' then he said, 'it were
A fisher or a hunter there,
In sunshine or in shade
To wander with an easy mind,
And build a household fire, and find
A home in every glade!

'What days and what bright years! Ah me!
Our life were life indeed, with thee
So pass'd in quiet bliss;
And all the while,' said he, 'to know
That we were in a world of woe,
On such an earth as this!'

And then he sometimes interwove
Fond thoughts about a father's love,
'For there,' said he, 'are spun
Around the heart such tender ties,
That our own children to our eyes
Are dearer than the sun.

'Sweet Ruth! and could you go with me
My helpmate in the woods to be,
Our shed at night to rear;
Or run, my own adopted bride,
A sylvan huntress at my side,
And drive the flying deer!

'Beloved Ruth!'—No more he said.
The wakeful Ruth at midnight shed
A solitary tear:
She thought again—and did agree
With him to sail across the sea,
And drive the flying deer.

'And now, as fitting is and right,
We in the church our faith will plight,
A husband and a wife.'
Even so they did; and I may say
That to sweet Ruth that happy day
Was more than human life.

Through dream and vision did she sink,
Delighted all the while to think
That, on those lonesome floods
And green savannahs, she should share
His board with lawful joy, and bear
His name in the wild woods.

But, as you have before been told,
This Stripling, sportive, gay, and bold,
And with his dancing crest
So beautiful, through savage lands
Had roam'd about, with vagrant bands
Of Indians in the West.

The wind, the tempest roaring high,
The tumult of a tropic sky
Might well be dangerous food
For him, a youth to whom was given
So much of earth—so much of heaven,
And such impetuous blood.

Whatever in those climes he found
Irregular in sight or sound
Did to his mind impart
A kindred impulse, seem'd allied
To his own powers, and justified
The working of his heart.

Nor less, to feed voluptuous thought,
The beauteous forms of Nature wrought,—
Fair trees and gorgeous flowers;
The breezes their own languor lent;
The stars had feelings, which they sent
Into those favour'd bowers.

Yet, in his worst pursuits, I ween
That sometimes there did intervene
Pure hopes of high intent:
For passions link'd to forms so fair
And stately, needs must have their share
Of noble sentiment.

But ill he lived, much evil saw,
With men to whom no better law
Nor better life was known;
Deliberately and undeceived
Those wild men's vices he received,
And gave them back his own.

His genius and his moral frame
Were thus impair'd, and he became
The slave of low desires:
A man who without self-control
Would seek what the degraded soul
Unworthily admires.

And yet he with no feign'd delight
Had woo'd the maiden, day and night
Had loved her, night and morn:
What could he less than love a maid
Whose heart with so much nature play'd—
So kind and so forlorn?

Sometimes most earnestly he said,
'O Ruth! I have been worse than dead;
False thoughts, thoughts bold and vain
Encompass'd me on every side
When I, in confidence and pride,
Had cross'd the Atlantic main.

'Before me shone a glorious world
Fresh as a banner bright, unfurl'd
To music suddenly:
I look'd upon those hills and plains,
And seem'd as if let loose from chains
To live at liberty!

'No more of this—for now, by thee,
Dear Ruth, more happily set free,
With nobler zeal I burn;
My soul from darkness is released
Like the whole sky when to the east
The morning doth return.'

Full soon that better mind was gone;
No hope, no wish remain'd, not one,—
They stirr'd him now no more;
New objects did not pleasure give,
And once again he wish'd to live
As lawless as before.

Meanwhile, as thus with him it fared,
They for the voyage were prepared,
And went to the sea-shore:
But, when they thither came, the youth
Deserted his poor bride, and Ruth
Could never find him more.

God help thee, Ruth!—Such pains she had
That she in half a year was mad
And in a prison housed;
And there, with many a doleful song
Made of wild words, her cup of wrong
She fearfully caroused.

Yet sometimes milder hours she knew,
Nor wanted sun, nor rain, nor dew,
Nor pastimes of the May,
—They all were with her in her cell;
And a clear brook with cheerful knell
Did o'er the pebbles play.

When Ruth three seasons thus had lain,
There came a respite to her pain;
She from her prison fled;
But of the Vagrant none took thought;
And where it liked her best she sought
Her shelter and her bread.

Among the fields she breathed again:
The master-current of her brain
Ran permanent and free;
And, coming to the banks of Tone,
There did she rest; and dwell alone
Under the greenwood tree.

The engines of her pain, the tools
That shaped her sorrow, rocks and pools,
And airs that gently stir
The vernal leaves—she loved them still,
Nor ever tax'd them with the ill
Which had been done to her.

A barn her Winter bed supplies;
But, till the warmth of Summer skies
And Summer days is gone,
(And all do in this tale agree)
She sleeps beneath the greenwood tree,
And other home hath none.

An innocent life, yet far astray!
And Ruth will, long before her day,
Be broken down and old.
Sore aches she needs must have! but less
Of mind, than body's wretchedness,
From damp, and rain, and cold.

If she is prest by want of food
She from her dwelling in the wood
Repairs to a road-side;
And there she begs at one steep place,
Where up and down with easy pace
The horsemen-travellers ride.

That oaten pipe of hers is mute
Or thrown away: but with a flute
Her loneliness she cheers;
This flute, made of a hemlock stalk,
At evening in his homeward walk
The Quantock woodman hears.

I, too, have pass'd her on the hills
Setting her little water-mills
By spouts and fountains wild—
Such small machinery as she turn'd
Ere she had wept, ere she had mourn'd,—
A young and happy child!

Farewell! and when thy days are told,
Ill-fated Ruth! in hallow'd mould
Thy corpse shall buried be;
For thee a funeral bell shall ring,
And all the congregation sing
A Christian psalm for thee.

W. Wordsworth

321

WRITTEN AMONG THE EUGANEAN HILLS

Many a green isle needs must be
In the deep wide sea of Misery,
Or the mariner, worn and wan,
Never thus could voyage on
Day and night, and night and day,
Drifting on his dreary way,
With the solid darkness black
Closing round his vessel's track;
Whilst above, the sunless sky
Big with clouds, hangs heavily,
And behind the tempest fleet
Hurries on with lightning feet,
Riving sail, and cord, and plank,
Till the ship has almost drank
Death from the o'er-brimming deep;
And sinks down, down, like that sleep
When the dreamer seems to be
Weltering through eternity;

And the dim low line before
Of a dark and distant shore
Still recedes, as ever still
Longing with divided will,
But no power to seek or shun,
He is ever drifted on
O'er the unreposing wave,
To the haven of the grave.

Ah, many flowering islands lie
In the waters of wide Agony:
To such a one this morn was led
My bark, by soft winds piloted.
—'Mid the mountains Euganean
I stood listening to the paean
With which the legion'd rooks did hail
The Sun's uprise majestical:
Gathering round with wings all hoar,
Through the dewy mist they soar
Like gray shades, till the eastern heaven
Bursts; and then,—as clouds of even
Fleck'd with fire and azure, lie
In the unfathomable sky,—
So their plumes of purple grain
Starr'd with drops of golden rain
Gleam above the sunlight woods,
As in silent multitudes
On the morning's fitful gale
Through the broken mist they sail;
And the vapours cloven and gleaming
Follow down the dark steep streaming,
Till all is bright, and clear, and still
Round the solitary hill.

Beneath is spread like a green sea
The waveless plain of Lombardy,
Bounded by the vaporous air,
Islanded by cities fair;
Underneath Day's azure eyes,
Ocean's nursling, Venice lies,—

A peopled labyrinth of walls,
Amphitrite's destined halls,
Which her hoary sire now paves
With his blue and beaming waves.
Lo! the sun upsprings behind,
Broad, red, radiant, half-reclined
On the level quivering line
Of the waters crystalline;
And before that chasm of light,
As within a furnace bright,
Column, tower, and dome, and spire,
Shine like obelisks of fire,
Pointing with inconstant motion
From the altar of dark ocean
To the sapphire-tinted skies;
As the flames of sacrifice
From the marble shrines did rise
As to pierce the dome of gold
Where Apollo spoke of old.

Sun-girt City! thou hast been
Ocean's child, and then his queen;
Now is come a darker day,
And thou soon must be his prey,
If the power that raised thee here
Hallow so thy watery bier.
A less drear ruin then than now,
With thy conquest-branded brow
Stooping to the slave of slaves
From thy throne among the waves
Wilt thou be,—when the sea-mew
Flies, as once before it flew,
O'er thine isles depopulate,
And all is in its ancient state,
Save where many a palace-gate
With green sea-flowers overgrown
Like a rock of ocean's own,
Topples o'er the abandon'd sea
As the tides change sullenly.

The fisher on his watery way
Wandering at the close of day,
Will spread his sail and seize his oar
Till he pass the gloomy shore,
Lest thy dead should, from this sleep,
Bursting o'er the starlight deep,
Lead a rapid masque of death
O'er the waters of his path.

Noon descends around me now:
'Tis the noon of autumn's glow,
When a soft and purple mist
Like a vaporous amethyst,
Or an air-dissolvéd star
Mingling light and fragrance, far
From the curved horizon's bound
To the point of heaven's profound,
Fills the overflowing sky;
And the plains that silent lie
Underneath; the leaves unsodden
Where the infant Frost has trodden
With his morning-wingéd feet
Whose bright print is gleaming yet;
And the red and golden vines
Piercing with their trellised lines
The rough, dark-skirted wilderness;
The dun and bladed grass no less,
Pointed from this hoary tower
In the windless air; the flower
Glimmering at my feet; the line
Of the olive-sandall'd Apennine
In the south dimly islanded;
And the Alps, whose snows are spread
High between the clouds and sun;
And of living things each one;
And my spirit, which so long
Darken'd this swift stream of song,—
Interpenetrated lie
By the glory of the sky;

Be it love, light, harmony,
Odour, or the soul of all
Which from heaven like dew doth fall,
Or the mind which feeds this verse,
Peopling the lone universe.

Noon descends, and after noon
Autumn's evening meets me soon,
Leading the infantine moon
And that one star, which to her
Almost seems to minister
Half the crimson light she brings
From the sunset's radiant springs:
And the soft dreams of the morn
(Which like wingéd winds had borne
To that silent isle, which lies
'Mid remember'd agonies,
The frail bark of this lone being),
Pass, to other sufferers fleeing,
And its ancient pilot, Pain,
Sits beside the helm again.

Other flowering isles must be
In the sea of Life and Agony:
Other spirits float and flee
O'er that gulf: Ev'n now, perhaps,
On some rock the wild wave wraps,
With folded wings they waiting sit
For my bark, to pilot it
To some calm and blooming cove;
Where for me, and those I love,
May a windless bower be built,
Far from passion, pain, and guilt,
In a dell 'mid lawny hills
Which the wild sea-murmur fills,
And soft sunshine, and the sound
Of old forests echoing round,
And the light and smell divine
Of all flowers that breathe and shine.
—We may live so happy there,

That the Spirits of the Air
Envying us, may ev'n entice
To our healing paradise
The polluting multitude:
But their rage would be subdued
By that clime divine and calm,
And the winds whose wings rain balm
On the uplifted soul, and leaves
Under which the bright sea heaves;
While each breathless interval
In their whisperings musical
The inspired soul supplies
With its own deep melodies;
And the Love which heals all strife
Circling, like the breath of life,
All things in that sweet abode
With its own mild brotherhood:—
They, not it, would change; and soon
Every sprite beneath the moon
Would repent its envy vain,
And the Earth grow young again.

P. B. Shelley

322

ODE TO THE WEST WIND

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
Pestilence-stricken multitudes! O thou
Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed
The wingéd seeds, where they lie cold and low,
Each like a corpse within its grave, until
Thine azure sister of the Spring shall blow
Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth, and fill
(Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in air)
With living hues and odours plain and hill:
Wild Spirit, which art moving everywhere;
Destroyer and Preserver; Hear, oh hear!

Thou on whose stream, 'mid the steep sky's commotion,
Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are shed,
Shook from the tangled boughs of heaven and ocean,
Angels of rain and lightning! there are spread
On the blue surface of thine airy surge,
Like the bright hair uplifted from the head
Of some fierce Maenad, ev'n from the dim verge
Of the horizon to the zenith's height—
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou dirge
Of the dying year, to which this closing night
Will be the dome of a vast sepulchre,
Vaulted with all thy congregated might
Of vapours, from whose solid atmosphere
Black rain, and fire, and hail, will burst: Oh hear!

Thou who didst waken from his summer-dreams
The blue Mediterranean, where he lay,
Lull'd by the coil of his crystalline streams,
Beside a pumice isle in Baiae's bay,
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser day,
All overgrown with azure moss, and flowers
So sweet, the sense faints picturing them! Thou
For whose path the Atlantic's level powers
Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below
The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear
The sapless foliage of the ocean, know
Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with fear
And tremble and despoil themselves: Oh hear!

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share
The impulse of thy strength, only less free
Than Thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in my boyhood, and could be
The comrade of thy wanderings over heaven,
As then, when to outstrip thy skiey speed

Scarce seem'd a vision,—I would ne'er have striven
As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh! lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!
A heavy weight of hours has chain'd and bow'd
One too like thee—tameless, and swift, and proud.

Make we thy lyre, ev'n as the forest is:
What if my leaves are falling like its own!
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies
Will take from both a deep autumnal tone,
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, Spirit fierce,
My spirit! be thou me, impetuous one!
Drive my dead thoughts over the universe,
Like wither'd leaves, to quicken a new birth;
And, by the incantation of this verse,
Scatter, as from an unextinguish'd hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawaken'd earth
The trumpet of a prophecy! O Wind,
If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

P. B. Shelley

323

NATURE AND THE POET

Suggested by a Picture of Peele Castle in a Storm, painted by Sir George Beaumont

I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile!
Four summer weeks I dwelt in sight of thee:
I saw thee every day; and all the while
Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea.

So pure the sky, so quiet was the air!
So like, so very like, was day to day!
Whene'er I look'd, thy image still was there;
It trembled, but it never pass'd away.

How perfect was the calm! It seem'd no sleep,
No mood, which season takes away, or brings:
I could have fancied that the mighty Deep
Was even the gentlest of all gentle things.

Ah! then—if mine had been the painter's hand
To express what then I saw; and add the gleam,
The light that never was on sea or land,
The consecration, and the Poet's dream,—

I would have planted thee, thou hoary pile,
Amid a world how different from this!
Beside a sea that could not cease to smile;
On tranquil land, beneath a sky of bliss.

Thou shouldst have seem'd a treasure-house divine
Of peaceful years; a chronicle of heaven;—
Of all the sunbeams that did ever shine
The very sweetest had to thee been given.

A picture had it been of lasting ease,
Elysian quiet, without toil or strife;
No motion but the moving tide; a breeze;
Or merely silent Nature's breathing life.

Such, in the fond illusion of my heart,
Such picture would I at that time have made;
And seen the soul of truth in every part,
A steadfast peace that might not be betray'd.

So once it would have been,—'tis so no more;
I have submitted to a new control:
A power is gone, which nothing can restore;
A deep distress hath humanized my soul.

Not for a moment could I now behold
A smiling sea, and be what I have been:
The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old;
This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.

Then, Beaumont, Friend! who would have been the friend
If he had lived, of Him whom I deplore,
This work of thine I blame not, but commend;
This sea in anger, and that dismal shore.

O 'tis a passionate work!—yet wise and well,
Well chosen is the spirit that is here;
That hulk which labours in the deadly swell,
This rueful sky, this pageantry of fear!

And this huge Castle, standing here sublime,
I love to see the look with which it braves,
—Cased in the unfeeling armour of old time—
The lightning, the fierce wind, and trampling waves.

—Farewell, farewell the heart that lives alone,
Housed in a dream, at distance from the Kind!
Such happiness, wherever it be known,
Is to be pitied; for 'tis surely blind.

But welcome fortitude, and patient cheer,
And frequent sights of what is to be borne!
Such sights, or worse, as are before me here:—
Not without hope we suffer and we mourn.

W. Wordsworth

324

THE POET'S DREAM

On a Poet's lips I slept
Dreaming like a love-adept
In the sound his breathing kept;
Nor seeks nor finds he mortal blisses,
But feeds on the aërial kisses
Of shapes that haunt Thought's wildernesses.
He will watch from dawn to gloom
The lake-reflected sun illume
The yellow bees in the ivy-bloom,
  Nor heed nor see what things they be—
But from these create he can
Forms more real than living Man,
  Nurslings of Immortality!

P. B. Shelley

325

GLEN-ALMAIN, THE NARROW GLEN

In this still place, remote from men,
Sleeps Ossian, in the Narrow Glen;
In this still place, where murmurs on
But one meek streamlet, only one:
He sang of battles, and the breath
Of stormy war, and violent death;
And should, methinks, when all was past,
Have rightfully been laid at last
Where rocks were rudely heap'd, and rent
As by a spirit turbulent;
Where sights were rough, and sounds were wild,
And everything unreconciled;
In some complaining, dim retreat,
For fear and melancholy meet;
But this is calm; there cannot be
A more entire tranquillity.

Does then the Bard sleep here indeed?
Or is it but a groundless creed?
What matters it?—I blame them not
Whose fancy in this lonely spot
Was moved; and in such way express'd
Their notion of its perfect rest.
A convent, even a hermit's cell,
Would break the silence of this Dell:
It is not quiet, is not ease;
But something deeper far than these:
The separation that is here
Is of the grave; and of austere
Yet happy feelings of the dead:
And, therefore, was it rightly said
That Ossian, last of all his race!
Lies buried in this lonely place.

W. Wordsworth

326

The World is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers;
Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!

This Sea that bares her bosom to the moon,
The winds that will be howling at all hours
And are up-gather'd now like sleeping flowers,
For this, for every thing, we are out of tune;

It moves us not,—Great God! I'd rather be
A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn,—
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,

Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea;
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathéd horn.

W. Wordsworth

327

WITHIN KING'S COLLEGE CHAPEL, CAMBRIDGE

Tax not the royal Saint with vain expense,
With ill-match'd aims the Architect who plann'd
(Albeit labouring for a scanty band
Of white-robed Scholars only) this immense

And glorious work of fine intelligence!
—Give all thou canst; high Heaven rejects the lore
Of nicely-calculated less or more:—
So deem'd the man who fashion'd for the sense

These lofty pillars, spread that branching roof
Self-poised, and scoop'd into ten thousand cells
Where light and shade repose, where music dwells

Lingering—and wandering on as loth to die;
Like thoughts whose very sweetness yieldeth proof
That they were born for immortality.

W. Wordsworth

328

ODE ON A GRECIAN URN

Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness,
  Thou foster-child of silence and slow time,
Sylvan historian, who canst thus express
  A flowery tale more sweetly than our rhyme:
What leaf-fringed legend haunts about thy shape
  Of deities or mortals, or of both,
    In Tempé or the dales of Arcady?
What men or gods are these? What maidens loth?
  What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
    What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy?

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
  Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
Not to the sensual ear, but, more endear'd,
  Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone:
Fair youth, beneath the trees, thou canst not leave
  Thy song, nor ever can those trees be bare;
    Bold Lover, never, never canst thou kiss,
Though winning near the goal—yet, do not grieve;
  She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy bliss,
    For ever wilt thou love, and she be fair!

Ah, happy, happy boughs! that cannot shed
  Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu;
And, happy melodist, unweariéd,
  For ever piping songs for ever new;
More happy love! more happy, happy love!
  For ever warm and still to be enjoy'd,
    For ever panting, and for ever young;
All breathing human passion far above,
  That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloy'd,
    A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

Who are these coming to the sacrifice?
To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
And all her silken flanks with garlands drest?
What little town by river or sea shore,
Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
Is emptied of this folk, this pious morn?
And, little town, thy streets for evermore
Will silent be; and not a soul to tell
Why thou art desolate, can e'er return.

O Attic shape! Fair attitude! with brede
Of marble men and maidens overwrought,
With forest branches and the trodden weed;
Thou, silent form, dost tease us out of thought
As doth eternity: Cold Pastoral!
When old age shall this generation waste,
Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
'Beauty is truth, truth beauty,'—that is all
Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.

J. Keats

329

YOUTH AND AGE

Verse, a breeze 'mid blossoms straying,
Where Hope clung feeding, like a bee—
Both were mine! Life went a-maying
With Nature, Hope, and Poesy,
When I was young!
When I was young?—Ah, woful when!
Ah! for the change 'twixt Now and Then
This breathing house not built with hands,
This body that does me grievous wrong,
O'er aery cliffs and glittering sands
How lightly then it flash'd along:
Like those trim skiffs, unknown of yore,
On winding lakes and rivers wide,

That ask no aid of sail or oar,
That fear no spite of wind or tide!
Nought cared this body for wind or weather
When Youth and I lived in't together.

Flowers are lovely; Love is flower-like;
Friendship is a sheltering tree;
O! the joys, that came down shower-like,
Of Friendship, Love, and Liberty,
Ere I was old!
Ere I was old? Ah woful Ere,
Which tells me, Youth's no longer here!
O Youth! for years so many and sweet,
'Tis known that Thou and I were one,
I'll think it but a fond conceit—
It cannot be, that Thou art gone!
Thy vesper-bell hath not yet toll'd:—
And thou wert aye a masker bold!
What strange disguise hast now put on
To make believe that Thou art gone?
I see these locks in silvery slips,
This drooping gait, this alter'd size:
But Springtide blossoms on thy lips,
And tears take sunshine from thine eyes!
Life is but Thought: so think I will
That Youth and I are house-mates still.

Dew-drops are the gems of morning,
But the tears of mournful eve!
Where no hope is, life's a warning
That only serves to make us grieve
When we are old:
—That only serves to make us grieve
With oft and tedious taking-leave,
Like some poor nigh-related guest
That may not rudely be dismist,
Yet hath out-stay'd his welcome while,
And tells the jest without the smile.

S. T. Coleridge

330

THE TWO APRIL MORNINGS

We walk'd along, while bright and red
Uprose the morning sun;
And Matthew stopp'd, he look'd, and said
'The will of God be done!'

A village schoolmaster was he,
With hair of glittering gray;
As blithe a man as you could see
On a spring holiday.

And on that morning, through the grass
And by the steaming rills
We travell'd merrily, to pass
A day among the hills.

'Our work,' said I, 'was well begun;
Then, from thy breast what thought,
Beneath so beautiful a sun,
So sad a sigh has brought?'

A second time did Matthew stop;
And fixing still his eye
Upon the eastern mountain-top,
To me he made reply:

'Yon cloud with that long purple cleft
Brings fresh into my mind
A day like this, which I have left
Full thirty years behind.

'And just above yon slope of corn
Such colours, and no other,
Were in the sky that April morn,
Of this the very brother.

'With rod and line I sued the sport
Which that sweet season gave,
And to the church-yard come, stopp'd short
Beside my daughter's grave.

'Nine summers had she scarcely seen,
The pride of all the vale;
And then she sang,—she would have been
A very nightingale.

'Six feet in earth my Emma lay;
And yet I loved her more—
For so it seem'd,—than till that day
I e'er had loved before.

'And turning from her grave, I met,
Beside the churchyard yew,
A blooming Girl, whose hair was wet
With points of morning dew.

'A basket on her head she bare;
Her brow was smooth and white:
To see a child so very fair,
It was a pure delight!

'No fountain from its rocky cave
E'er tripp'd with foot so free;
She seem'd as happy as a wave
That dances on the sea.

'There came from me a sigh of pain
Which I could ill confine;
I look'd at her, and look'd again:
And did not wish her mine!

—Matthew is in his grave, yet now
Methinks I see him stand
As at that moment, with a bough
Of wilding in his hand.

W. Wordsworth

331

THE FOUNTAIN

A Conversation

We talk'd with open heart, and tongue
Affectionate and true,
A pair of friends, though I was young,
And Matthew seventy-two.

We lay beneath a spreading oak,
Beside a mossy seat;
And from the turf a fountain broke
And gurgled at our feet.

'Now, Matthew!' said I, 'let us match
This water's pleasant tune
With some old border-song, or catch
That suits a summer's noon;

'Or of the church-clock and the chimes
Sing here beneath the shade
That half-mad thing of witty rhymes
Which you last April made!'

In silence Matthew lay, and eyed
The spring beneath the tree;
And thus the dear old man replied
The gray-hair'd man of glee:

'No check, no stay, this Streamlet fears,
How merrily it goes!
'Twill murmur on a thousand years
And flow as now it flows.

'And here, on this delightful day,
I cannot choose but think
How oft, a vigorous man, I lay
Beside this fountain's brink.

'My eyes are dim with childish tears,
My heart is idly stirr'd,
For the same sound is in my ears
Which in those days I heard.

'Thus fares it still in our decay:
And yet the wiser mind
Mourns less for what Age takes away,
Than what it leaves behind.

'The blackbird amid leafy trees,
The lark above the hill,
Let loose their carols when they please,
Are quiet when they will.

'With Nature never do they wage
A foolish strife; they see
A happy youth, and their old age
Is beautiful and free:

'But we are press'd by heavy laws;
And often, glad no more,
We wear a face of joy, because
We have been glad of yore.

'If there be one who need bemoan
His kindred laid in earth,
The household hearts that were his own,—
It is the man of mirth.

'My days, my friend, are almost gone,
My life has been approved,
And many love me; but by none
Am I enough beloved.'

'Now both himself and me he wrongs,
The man who thus complains!
I live and sing my idle songs
Upon these happy plains:

'And Matthew, for thy children dead
I'll be a son to thee!'
At this he grasp'd my hand and said,
'Alas! that cannot be.'

—We rose up from the fountain-side;
And down the smooth descent
Of the green sheep-track did we glide;
And through the wood we went;

And ere we came to Leonard's rock
He sang those witty rhymes
About the crazy old church-clock,
And the bewilder'd chimes.

W. Wordsworth

332

THE RIVER OF LIFE

The more we live, more brief appear
  Our life's succeeding stages:
A day to childhood seems a year,
  And years like passing ages.

The gladsome current of our youth,
  Ere passion yet disorders,
Steals lingering like a river smooth
  Along its grassy borders.

But as the care-worn cheek grows wan,
  And sorrow's shafts fly thicker,
Ye Stars, that measure life to man,
  Why seem your courses quicker?

When joys have lost their bloom and breath
  And life itself is vapid,
Why, as we reach the Falls of Death,
  Feel we its tide more rapid?

It may be strange—yet who would change
Time's course to slower speeding,
When one by one our friends have gone
And left our bosoms bleeding?

Heaven gives our years of fading strength
Indemnifying fleetness;
And those of youth, a seeming length,
Proportion'd to their sweetness.

T. Campbell

333

THE HUMAN SEASONS

Four Seasons fill the measure of the year;
There are four seasons in the mind of man:
He has his lusty Spring, when fancy clear
Takes in all beauty with an easy span:

He has his Summer, when luxuriously
Spring's honey'd cud of youthful thought he loves
To ruminate, and by such dreaming high
Is nearest unto heaven: quiet coves

His soul has in its Autumn, when his wings
He furleth close; contented so to look
On mists in idleness—to let fair things
Pass by unheeded as a threshold brook.

He has his Winter too of pale misfeature,
Or else he would forego his mortal nature.

J. Keats

334

A DIRGE

Rough wind, that moanest loud
Grief too sad for song:
Wild wind, when sullen cloud
Knells all the night long;

Sad storm whose tears are vain,
Bare woods whose branches stain,
Deep caves and dreary main,—
Wail for the world's wrong!

P. B. Shelley

335

THRENOS

O World! O Life! O Time!
On whose last steps I climb,
Trembling at that where I had stood before;
When will return the glory of your prime?
No more—Oh, never more!

Out of the day and night
A joy has taken flight:
Fresh spring, and summer, and winter hoar
Move my faint heart with grief, but with delight
No more—Oh, never more!

P. B. Shelley

336

THE TROSACHS

There's not a nook within this solemn Pass,
But were an apt confessional for One
Taught by his summer spent, his autumn gone,
That Life is but a tale of morning grass

Wither'd at eve. From scenes of art which chase
That thought away, turn, and with watchful eyes
Feed it 'mid Nature's old felicities,
Rocks, rivers, and smooth lakes more clear than glass

Untouch'd, unbreathed upon:—Thrice happy quest,
If from a golden perch of aspen spray
(October's workmanship to rival May),

The pensive warbler of the ruddy breast
That moral sweeten by a heaven-taught lay,
Lulling the year, with all its cares, to rest!

W. Wordsworth

337

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky:
So was it when my life began,
So is it now I am a man,
So be it when I shall grow old
Or let me die!
The Child is father of the Man:
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

W. Wordsworth

338

ODE ON INTIMATIONS OF IMMORTALITY FROM RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY CHILDHOOD

There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,
The earth, and every common sight
To me did seem
Apparell'd in celestial light,
The glory and the freshness of a dream.
It is not now as it hath been of yore;—
Turn wheresoe'er I may,
By night or day,
The things which I have seen I now can see no more.

The rainbow comes and goes,
And lovely is the rose;
The moon doth with delight
Look round her when the heavens are bare;
Waters on a starry night
Are beautiful and fair;
The sunshine is a glorious birth;
But yet I know, where'er I go,
That there hath past away a glory from the earth.

Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
And while the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound,
To me alone there came a thought of grief:
A timely utterance gave that thought relief,
And I again am strong.
The cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep;—
No more shall grief of mine the season wrong:
I hear the echoes through the mountain throng,
The winds come to me from the fields of sleep,
And all the earth is gay;
Land and sea
Give themselves up to jollity,
And with the heart of May
Doth every beast keep holiday;—
Thou child of joy
Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy
Shepherd-boy!

Ye blesséd Creatures, I have heard the call
Ye to each other make; I see
The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;
My heart is at your festival,
My head hath its coronal,
The fulness of your bliss, I feel—I feel it all.
Oh evil day! if I were sullen
While Earth herself is adorning
This sweet May-morning;
And the children are culling
On every side
In a thousand valleys far and wide,
Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm
And the babe leaps up on his mother's arm:—
I hear, I hear, with joy I hear!
—But there's a tree, of many, one,
A single field which I have look'd upon,
Both of them speak of something that is gone:

The pansy at my feet
Doth the same tale repeat:
Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting
And cometh from afar;
Not in entire forgetfulness,
And not in utter nakedness,
But trailing clouds of glory do we come
From God, who is our home:
Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
Shades of the prison-house begin to close
Upon the growing Boy,
But he beholds the light, and whence it flows,
He sees it in his joy;
The Youth, who daily farther from the east
Must travel, still is Nature's priest,
And by the vision splendid
Is on his way attended;
At length the Man perceives it die away,
And fade into the light of common day.

Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
Yearnings she hath in her own natural kind,
And, even with something of a mother's mind
And no unworthy aim,
The homely nurse doth all she can
To make her foster-child, her inmate, Man,
Forget the glories he hath known,
And that imperial palace whence he came.

Behold the Child among his new-born blisses,
A six years' darling of a pigmy size!
See, where 'mid work of his own hand he lies,
Fretted by sallies of his mother's kisses,
With light upon him from his father's eyes!
See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,

Some fragment from his dream of human life,
Shaped by himself with newly-learnéd art;
A wedding or a festival,
A mourning or a funeral;
And this hath now his heart,
And unto this he frames his song:
Then will he fit his tongue
To dialogues of business, love, or strife;
But it will not be long
Ere this be thrown aside,
And with new joy and pride
The little actor cons another part;
Filling from time to time his 'humorous stage'
With all the Persons, down to palsied Age,
That life brings with her in her equipage;
As if his whole vocation
Were endless imitation.

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie
Thy soul's immensity;
Thou best philosopher, who yet dost keep
Thy heritage, thou eye among the blind,
That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
Haunted for ever by the eternal Mind,—
Mighty Prophet! Seer blest!
On whom those truths do rest
Which we are toiling all our lives to find,
In darkness lost, the darkness of the grave;
Thou, over whom thy Immortality
Broods like the day, a master o'er a slave,
A Presence which is not to be put by;
Thou little child, yet glorious in the might
Of heaven-born freedom on thy being's height,
Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
The years to bring the inevitable yoke,
Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife?
Full soon thy soul shall have her earthly freight,
And custom lie upon thee with a weight
Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!

O joy! that in our embers
Is something that doth live,
That Nature yet remembers
What was so fugitive!
The thought of our past years in me doth breed
Perpetual benediction: not indeed
For that which is most worthy to be blest,
Delight and liberty, the simple creed
Of Childhood, whether busy or at rest,
With new-fledged hope still fluttering in his breast:—
—Not for these I raise
The song of thanks and praise;
But for those obstinate questionings
Of sense and outward things,
Fallings from us, vanishings;
Blank misgivings of a creature
Moving about in worlds not realized,
High instincts, before which our mortal nature
Did tremble like a guilty thing surprized:
But for those first affections,
Those shadowy recollections,
Which, be they what they may,
Are yet the fountain-light of all our day,
Are yet a master-light of all our seeing;
Uphold us, cherish, and have power to make
Our noisy years seem moments in the being
Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,
To perish never;
Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavour,
Nor man nor boy
Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
Can utterly abolish or destroy!
Hence, in a season of calm weather
Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither;
Can in a moment travel thither—
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

Then, sing ye birds, sing, sing a joyous song!
And let the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound!
We, in thought, will join your throng
Ye that pipe and ye that play,
Ye that through your hearts to-day
Feel the gladness of the May!
What though the radiance which was once so bright
Be now for ever taken from my sight,
Though nothing can bring back the hour
Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;
We will grieve not, rather find
Strength in what remains behind;
In the primal sympathy
Which having been must ever be;
In the soothing thoughts that spring
Out of human suffering;
In the faith that looks through death,
In years that bring the philosophic mind.

And O, ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills, and Groves,
Forbode not any severing of our loves!
Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
I only have relinquish'd one delight
To live beneath your more habitual sway:
I love the brooks which down their channels fret
Even more than when I tripp'd lightly as they;
The innocent brightness of a new-born day
Is lovely yet;
The clouds that gather round the setting sun
Do take a sober colouring from an eye
That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
Thanks to the human heart by which we live,
Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
To me the meanest flower that blows can give
Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

W. Wordsworth

339

Music, when soft voices die,
Vibrates in the memory—
Odours, when sweet violets sicken,
Live within the sense they quicken.

Rose leaves, when the rose is dead,
Are heap'd for the beloved's bed;
And so thy thoughts, when Thou art gone,
Love itself shall slumber on.

P. B. Shelley

NOTES

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION

The four books of the Golden Treasury represent approximately the four great historical divisions of English literature. Book First represents the work of the Elizabethans and their immediate predecessors and successors; Book Second, the work of Milton and Dryden, leading to the period of formal restraint that followed. In Book Third we find, not so much the poetry of the artificial or Classic period, as the waifs and strays of lyric verse that, within its bounds, gave promise of the greater awakening to follow. In Book Fourth, we see what one might call the renaissance of enthusiasm, the new outburst of spiritual earnestness that marks the beginnings of what we still regard as modern literature.

Of these books, the first only can be said to contain matter strictly of one sort. The second, covering a period of transition, contains all the variations current in such a period, the poems of those who are first to essay the new, together with the reminiscent work of those who are last to lay the old aside. The third, as has been seen, finds typical lyrics only in work not quite characteristic of the very prosaic age that it would represent, and the fourth contains not a little that is influenced by the old. In each, however, there is a prevailing atmosphere, a general tone that the student should endeavor to perceive. In the notes on each book there will be an attempt to present this specifically. Here it will be sufficient to make clear the general spirit of each great period, to make plain its causes, its chief manifestations, and its relation to the more active history of the world.

The secret of the Elizabethan age lies in its enthusiasm, its joy in life. It was the age of the Renaissance, the intoxicating rediscovery of art and literature. In the Middle Ages, partly through the violence and isolation of those warlike days, partly through monastic disapproval of heathen letters, the culture of Greece and Rome had virtually passed from sight. The old legends had been forgotten, the great epics and tragedies lost or disregarded, the peculiar tone of Greek and Roman art, its delight in beauty, its sense of form and proportion, had perished. In the Renaissance, the new birth of culture, the new dawn that, beginning in Italy, stole slowly northward into England, all this light, temporarily eclipsed, burst again upon the world. Men read once more the old myths, the old legends that interpreted nature and that embodied passion. And these old tales, these beautiful personifications, they received, not with a pedantic pride in learning but with a new delight in the thing learned. They read mythology, not as a student, 'looking up' a name he has met in a 'lesson,' but as a child, absorbed in a new book of fairy tales of a beauty hitherto unimagined. The gods of Greece once more appeared, as vividly realized as by their first worshipers. An age starved by ascetic medievalism was only too ready to riot in the profusion of pagan imaginings. As men abandoned their dark castles for many-windowed, wide-gardened mansions, just so their literature expanded into the exuberance that marks the era of Elizabeth.

If such work contains deliberate imitation, if at first sight we find it artificial, we must remember that it was an artificiality of enthusiasm, the imitativeness of the child's 'make-believe,' not his elder's weary compliance with some fashion. It was the very age of 'play-acting.' Men pretended, they expressed emotions they did not naturally feel; but they revelled in the imagination that they did really feel them. The prevalent adulation of Elizabeth, the exaggerated admiration of her beauty, her wit, her nobility of character,—this was not pure flattery. The patriotic imagination of her courtiers carried them beyond themselves: she was the English Diana, the Faerie Queene, 'Great Mistress of a Glorious Isle.' The lover 'perishing' from hopeless passion for his Rosalyne, really suffered in his imagined passion, though he delighted in his sufferings. Melancholy Jaques, like a child at play, maintained and enjoyed a consistent melancholy of his own devising. It was an age drunk with imaginative indulgence.

This spirit leads to certain definite peculiarities. There is, for one thing, a constant reference to the classics that strikes the modern reader as over-learned. One must remember that not only did the Elizabethan read the classics with delight, but that, unlike the student of to-day, he had virtually no modern literature to distract him from them. The poet of that day found in Latin or Greek literature his Shakspere, his Milton, his Scott, his Wordsworth, not to speak of his Emerson, his Carlyle, and his Macaulay. And the literature of the age partook in some degree of the nature of that whereon it fed.

Incidental to this peculiarity, we find another, the tendency to the formal pastoral, the pastoral founded less on observation of shepherd life than on enjoyment of the beauties of this life as pictured by the Greek Theocritus, or the Roman Virgil, or, possibly, the later imitators of both. The shepherd is frequently a conventional disguise for the young courtier; the shepherdess, for the lady to whom his devotion is directed. The whole is a graceful fiction, but presented with an ardor and pleasure that makes us forget its artificiality.

Related to this is the artificial love-song, the love-song inspired rather by the desire to write love poetry than by any immediate passion. Often, as has been hinted, the passion may have been aroused in the writer by his own verse. Whatever the case, love-lyrics, often sonnets, in imitation of the love-songs of France and Italy, developed as a distinct type of literature from the days of Wyatt down to the Restoration. These are often in the pastoral form spoken of above. Sometimes they introduce extravagant use of classical imagery—Venuses and Cupids being always in attendance; and sometimes incline to strange and fantastic comparisons and 'conceits,' as the Elizabethan called gracefully far-fetched notions.

These conceits are not limited to love-songs. They occur in verse upon all subjects, even in religious writings. They illustrate what one might call the 'freakish' character of the age, its delight in eccentricity, in picturesque perversity, in audacity. Lyly's Euphues, a work of showy phrases and stilted sentences, won a popularity that is amazing. The Elizabethan took the same pleasure in a novel phrase that he did in a novel act. Raleigh's most extravagant 'conceit' in verse was but a written equivalent to his gracefully unexpected use of his cloak as a carpet for Her Majesty.

And yet with all this spirit of play, the age is one of real interest in a very real world. Not again, till the renewal of spontaneous literature with the nineteenth century, do we find so sharp a reality, such definiteness of touch, such daring presentation of detail. The reason lies in the poetic sincerity of the age. Men felt that life was wonderful and beautiful, and, therefore, aiming at what they perceived as a truth, they saw no need of avoiding reality. Later writers, assuming, for poetic reasons, a belief in the beauty of things that they did not actually feel,—convinced at heart that poetry had to lie, that the world is really mean and ugly,—these writers 'conventionalized,' that is, they treated objects dimly, and did not venture upon the frankly realistic touches that we find in Shakspere and his contemporaries. It is the presence of these minute bits of detail that, through all the rioting make-believe of the pastoral and the Petrarchian love-song, makes us feel that the Elizabethan had a very compelling sense of life as it is.

In the form of verse the Elizabethan poet followed the ear rather than the letter of metrical law. In some cases, the form, like the thought, runs riot. In most, its music, less restrained than in the period that follows, is more truly lyric, more gracefully captivating. In few lyrics have sound and sense been better 'married' than in some of the little songs that mark this period.

With all its merits, however, this age of the Renaissance has a darker side,—a side that leads us directly to the Puritan movement that was to darken all this brightness. The Renaissance, glorious as it is in imaginative exuberance, wonderful in its sense of all that life is, is lacking in moral earnestness, in the deeper sense of what life means and of what life should be. From Greece and Rome it had revived the power to see and to express the beauty of nature, the grace of the human form, the depths of human passion. It had reawakened the magic gift of poet, painter, and musician. It had renewed the power to enjoy. But here it stopped. Life was but a spectacle,—a wonderful spectacle, but that was all. One must shut one's eyes to the great mystery, the darkness that lay at the end of all.

Yet one could not so shut one's eyes. The great question that Death asks as to the meaning of life insisted upon an answer. And the age gave little. Religion, to most writers, at least, seems to have been too indifferently believed to be of help. It was an age of paganism, of pagan joy in life, of pagan ignorance of the end, of pagan hopelessness of any deeper meaning than this world shows us. Some poets turn their backs upon the question. Others give the pagan answer: 'let us live while we may, snatch the passing hour, for death ends all.' In Shakspere, whose nature was too profound to ignore any vital question, we feel most deeply the tragic hopelessness of his time. This age had pinned all upon beauty, yet saw that beauty perishes,—upon this world, and yet saw that this world cannot give lasting happiness. So inevitably the pagan delight—and a wonderful and magic delight it was—darkened to pessimism, to despair.

> 'We are such stuff
> As dreams are made on, and our little life
> Is rounded by a sleep.'

> 'Life . . . is a tale
> Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
> Signifying nothing.'

Such a feeling, leading, on the one side, to the conclusion that one must forget the terror of the grave in enjoying the pleasure of the moment, led no less certainly, on the other, to the reaction,—to Puritanism. To the writer of the Renaissance, this world was all in all, wonderfully beautiful, pathetically ephemeral. To the Puritan it was a snare, a device of Satan to lure men from the thought of God. That its beauty could be a means to lead men to God, a symbol of the eternal beauty of the Divine Being, this truth was left for a later age.

Puritanism, regarding art as folly and beauty as a snare, contributed little to literature. From its prosaic levels Milton alone emerges,—in it, but not of it,—the one man of his age able to see confidently a moral significance in beauty and to make art an instrument of moral truth. In him we see, besides, a new tendency. We have noted that, with all their beauty, with all their pleasure in reality, the lyrists of the seventeenth century inclined to an over-elaborateness of manner. This at first was founded upon real enthusiasm, but, as the creative ardor of the age cooled, there was substituted for this a motive more artificial, a mere desire to astonish. Ingenuity took the place of imagination, and deliberate over-adornment took the place of the earlier bounty that came from mere excess of originative force.

In Milton, in contrast to this extravagance, we feel a sobriety, a restraint that one cannot but characterize as classic. This sobriety is not, however, as we shall see it later in other writers, adopted in deliberate imitation of classical models or in conformity with rules of criticism. It came, first from the dignity and calm sincerity of his nature, and secondly from the manifestation, in literature, of the same causes that led the Puritan in life to dress soberly, to fare simply, to behave with gravity. It came, moreover, though not from direct imitation of the classics, yet from their influence. Milton is always the man of letters, the man to whom the world of books is no less real, is perhaps more real, than the world of nature and action. His books, the books which tinged his whole personality and view of life, were the great works of Greece and Rome. A man who reads more Latin than English, who writes Latin as easily and as excellently as English, is naturally affected by the chief qualities of a literature that has become so thoroughly a part of himself. And in Milton we see reflected the statuesque dignity, the sober restraint, that marks the literature of the Romans.

The earlier Elizabethans, we have seen, were likewise saturated with the classic literature. Upon them, however, with the possible exception of Jonson, the influence of the classics was shown chiefly in material. They took from the ancients much of their joy in beauty, their wealth of imagination, their stores of legend and history. They missed, as has been said, the restraint, the calmness, the sober repose, with which these were presented. Milton, more familiar than most of them with the form of the masters, or at least more impressed by it, comes in his work nearest of all English writers to the actual manner of the great classic writers of antiquity. But, following him, we come to a new group of writers who, failing to regain the spirit of the earlier literature, devoted their whole attention to form, and applied the rules of the ancients with a strictness and deadly precision that Virgil or Cicero never dreamed of.

To these the old stories of gods and heroes were not the natural outgrowth of imagination and religion, but were ingenious fictions devised by the ancient poets to make their poems effective. Figures of speech were not the result of feeling, but devices, to be constructed by rule, to indicate certain emotions. Common words must be carefully avoided, while certain words and phrases regarded as 'poetic' were used regularly in poetry. The new age that they introduced was a period of art purely mechanical, an age of intellect rather than emotion, of ingenuity rather than enthusiasm. Not only was it an age of little expression of wonder in the beauty of the world, —it was an age of positive doubt of the reality of such beauty. Shakspere had lamented that beauty was so brief, that it was so miraculous, yet of the passing moment. In Swift and in many of his contemporaries we feel a conviction that beauty is only a deception, that the world is really ugly, if we look close enough, human nature mean, human life loathsome, the human body a compound of ugliness and disease. A certain graceful pretence yet lingers in conventional religion, and in the form of romantic love, yet one feels that the poet doubts both the reality of heaven and the actual charm of any woman. And the worst is that, unlike Shakspere, he is not driven to madness by his realization of the emptiness of his world. He is a person of common sense. He goes his way, observes his kind with a shrewd understanding of character and motives—particularly of the worse sort, —and shuts his eyes, absolutely, to any spiritual significance in the world.

With such a mood, seeing no reason in poetic enthusiasm, an age naturally turns its attention to poetic form. Under the influence of French criticism, the leaders of English poetical art, Waller and Dryden, followed by Pope, brought about a total change in poetic manner. The elaborate conceits, the extravagances of the later

Elizabethans, were abolished. Simplicity became the rule. It was not, however, the simplicity of sincere feeling, the sincerity of Wordsworth; it was a ceremonious simplicity, the simplicity of a gentleman's evening dress, the starched and formalized simplicity that is the height of artificiality. With it came the formal ode, the heroic couplet, the development of new fields for verse, philosophy, politics, social satire,—work hardly poetical, certainly not lyrical, yet typical of the self-complacent, cold-hearted artificiality of an age that had no need of spirituality.

Such an age does not write lyrics. Consequently Books II and III represent little of its typical character. Dryden is represented by two odes, Pope by one short lyric—and that written almost in his infancy. Both Gray and Collins owe much of their lyric power, not to the age in which they live, but to the fact that both were beginning to show that impatience of the restrictions of their age, that longing for sincere poetic expression, that was a token of the coming change in poetic taste. The bulk of Books II and III,—the poetry of real lyric value,—is contributed either by the late Elizabethans, who looked back to the sunset, or the few lyrists, out of touch with their age, who sang, like the lark, with some prophetic foresight of the coming sunrise. Remove from Book II all poems of Milton, Herrick, Campion, Lovelace, Crashaw, Marvell, and the Scotch lyrists, and from Book III all the poetry of Burns and his countrymen, of the insanely independent Blake and the secluded Cowper, and little is left of the purely lyric note, and that little is exceptional, rather than representative.

Of those that appear in this volume Dryden stands as the most characteristic of the French influence, and in his work there is perceptible, under all the formal, artificial restraint, a native impetuosity that gives his odes undeniable power. Gray and Collins, following very closely in his steps, show, nevertheless, in anticipation, the less restrained feeling, the more emotional mood of the age that was to follow them.

And yet this period of artificiality was not, even in itself, without its worth. The odes, as Palgrave says, 'exhibit that wider and grander range which years and experience and the struggles of the time conferred on Poetry. Our Muses now give expression to political feeling, to religious thought, to a high philosophic statesmanship. That the change brought with it at first a loss of nature and simplicity is undeniable: yet the bolder and wider scope which poetry took between 1620 and 1700, and the successful efforts then made to gain greater clearness in expression, in their results have been no slight compensation.' However their misconception of the classical spirit hampered Gray and Collins, yet their odes echo not a little of the noble qualities of the greater poems of Greece and Rome,—their calm repression, their perfected plan, their attentive fitting of form to thought, their perfect polish in each word and syllable. If, in verse so constructed, we find few lines or none that rise to the magic power of those that flash into the mind of the poet of emotion, of unpremeditated art, we find yet a directness and singleness of purpose, an adaptation of means to end, that the impetuously unplanned early works, like many modern works, often lack.

The revival of lyric verse that characterizes Book IV accompanies the beginnings of a new movement, the so-called 'Romanticism, that, beginning gradually in the course of the eighteenth century, developed into the controlling spirit of English poetry during the century following. No student should fail to understand clearly the nature of this new spirit.

Romanticism, in its essence, is the opposite of formal classicism. The latter inclines to measure all by conformity to rule. Romanticism judges by the effect produced. The question asked regarding a new poem is not whether it obeys a code, but whether it is beautiful. If it is, then no matter by what means that end has been attained.

As a consequence of this principle, we find in Romanticism many new elements, as well as not a few of the old elements, discarded by classicism, and once more revived. In the first place, the romanticist essays a wider range of subjects. He writes of what appeals to his emotions. He writes consequently both of the simple and familiar, and of the strange and abnormal. The simple sights of home, the simple feelings of daily life, appeal to elemental emotions; so, on the other hand, do stories of spectres, exhibitions of unrestrained emotion, sights of horror. He may sing of the daisy in the field; he may sing of the earthquakes among mountain peaks. In both cases one factor is the same, a primal intensity in the feeling appealed to. Of the artificialities of conventional society, of politeness, social precedence, etiquette, he does not write. His subject is the human heart and all that awakens its deeper feelings.

By a natural consequence of his spiritual seriousness, he is, as a rule, religious. If an atheist, he is not quietly contented in atheism. It is an age of fervid religion or of energetically outspoken unbelief, not of polite indifference. Moreover, convinced of a moral responsibility, he no longer, like Pope, could dismiss the problems of human existence with the simple solution that 'whatever is, is right.' He felt a kinship in the universe, a cogency in moral law. It was for him to advance the Right that was to be, to free the slave, heal the sick, relieve the oppressed. Romanticism did not result from the French Revolution,—it was of the spirit that made that revolution. No form, whether merely of literary expression, or of religion, of government, of social custom, could be accepted merely because it was old. It must justify itself. As Carlyle declared, customs are but the clothes of society, to be cast off when they no longer serve our purposes. It was an age that went behind Things, that turned to Ideas, an age of a new philosophy, born of German speculation, that felt in life the presence of a divine meaning, a meaning that it strove to see clearly and interpret.

To understand the nature of this age as influencing both thought and form, it is well to consider briefly William Wordsworth, its typical poet. The whole thought and philosophy of his work are so remote from those of the age preceding as to have been unintelligible to it. His chief subject is nature,—not the matter-of-fact nature of the eighteenth century, which needed to be decked out with classical adornments before being presented to cultured readers,—not even the nature of Shakspere's day,—the nature that roused vain longings that it could never satisfy, a brief delight whose end is death. Nature to him is not merely an inanimate world, dead rocks, inert waters and material earth; it is a nature of life and soul, a nature that includes man and embodies God. It is the very form in which He dwells, His visible Thought. The lines,

> 'To me the meanest flower that blows can give
> Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears,'

contain in brief, his whole philosophy. By the watchful, reverent study of God's will in the world about us, and in the world within man's heart, we may come, he held, to comprehend His nature and to grow to His semblance.

From such a belief there results, naturally, a high view of human nature. The eighteenth century saw man as an artificial being who tried, rather unsuccessfully, to conceal the beast that underlay his nature. The soul was an empty abstraction,—real man was animal, veneered with refinement. To Wordsworth, man is primarily a spiritual being, in soul and body alike an expression of God's meaning. And, as he believed, this expression was best seen in simple life; in the child, with his recollections of his divine origin; in the peasant, the primitive man, untutored and unperverted.

The Renaissance had recognized joyfully that life was beautiful, but saw in its beauty either a vain mockery or a snare to lead men from God. The writers of the eighteenth century, with a very real perception of the material side of life, doubted its real beauty and, when they wrote of the ideal, wrote of it as a graceful fiction, a pleasant myth, quite apart from the world about them. In the new view, the outer world, the world of sense became, not different from the inner and spiritual world, but a perceptible expression of it. God was not a being apart from His world, but in it and of it. Man was not born in sin and condemned to evil, but a mirror, more or less faulty, it is true, of divine excellence.

With such a belief, life assumed new wonder, new meaning. Poetry was not a graceful pretence,—it was an inspired expression of insight. The poet became, in the statelier sense of the word, a prophet,—one who should see and declare to others God's meaning in His world.

A poet with this view of his calling can have no patience with rules and laws, unless they are founded on truth and natural necessity. Wordsworth, partly because of his date, partly because of his expressed views, has come to stand as representing the revolutionary methods of all his contemporaries and successors. Strictly, the term 'method' is in error as applied to his work and theirs, for what he preached, and with them practiced, was rather denial of the false method that had been accepted.

He held, in brief, that the language of poetry should be identical with the language of prose, marked by no artificial distinction. No word appropriate in prose was too common for poetry; no word not suitable in simple speech should be used in a poem. This, as he expressed it, goes beyond the truth. What he really practiced in his best poems, and what is sustained by the test of general practice, is this: The true poet will use words with his mind upon the feeling he would convey. He will use no affected word because other poets use it, he will discard no word simply because rule justifies its use. His aim is to maintain a certain tone, not of illusion, but of a high seriousness, as intense, as earnest as the tone of divine worship. And, as in divine worship, he must allow nothing that will rudely recall one to the nearer, though not more real, surroundings of daily life. So, just as the worshiper finds help in subdued light, rich color, solemn music, the poet calls to his aid the color and wealth of language and of imagery. To this extent the language of poetry must and will differ from that of prose. The great fact taught by Wordsworth and his followers was that poetry is not aided, but rather injured, by cold-blooded artificial devices.

Poetic feeling cannot be created by the use of any fixed sort of word,—the rule must be the poet's sense of art, his feeling of taste. Does the word arouse in the reader the emotion intended? If so, that is the word to use. It was in pursuit of effectiveness without artificiality that poetry turned, as in the Ancient Mariner, to the past, reviving the quaint and homely, but deeply significant words of our earlier tongue, finding them a help toward the simple sincerity it sought.

This simplification affected, of course, not only words, but figures of speech, allusions, personifications, all the 'machinery' of poetic expression. It was realized more and more clearly that poetry that would rouse worthy feelings must originate, not from coldly devised mechanical stimulus, but from vitally felt, sympathetically shared emotion.

A similar change took place with regard to metrical form. The desire for classic restraint,—a zeal that had fastened English verse in narrower limits than Virgil had ever endured, now passed away. The question as with words was simply one of effectiveness. What means would best accomplish the desired end? In Coleridge's Christabel and Kubla Khan is seen the extreme of the resulting freedom. One wrote in forms that embodied one's emotion. The heroic couplet vanished from existence. As with vocabulary, old forms were revived, particularly the simple stanza of the ancient ballad. Modern verse knows no rule but the rules of ear and taste.

It is interesting to see how in Book Third this romanticism is anticipated. In almost every writer one finds at least one mark of the approaching change. In Gray, even in his odes, there is an earnestness alien to the time, while his Elegy is modern in its entire spirit. In Collins we find, not only the form of Pindar's odes, but something of the original lyric ecstacy. In Blake and Smart, isolated by insane eccentricity from the prevailing spirit of their age, we find work that might well have been written a century later. Most striking of all is the work of the minor Scotch lyrists, who, whether ignorant of the more artificial literature of the South, or strong in their love for the ballads and songs of their own land, spoke simply the emotions of their hearts. Greatest of these, of course, is Burns, but the songs of Lady Nairn and Lady Lindsay are little below his best. In them we see, not merely a continuance of the simple poetry of the past, but an influence that did much to direct the new poetry of the nineteenth century.

In the Fourth Book, it is easy to trace out the lines already indicated. By the side of Wordsworth we find the related genius of Coleridge; and the subsequent group of Keats, Byron, and Shelley, each with his own personal variation, carries on the general romantic spirit. In Scott we find a link between Burns and the literature of England,—an author who is to literature what James I. of England was to history, uniting the two realms.

Each of the four books represents, on the whole, one particular period with its distinctive merits. Within each book, the single poems, it will be observed, are grouped without regard to date or even authorship. If this, on the one hand, is perplexing, it will yet serve to bring different authors side by side, so that the reader will find it far easier to note characteristic resemblances and differences. To perceive these, and yet to observe, no less clearly, the great general characteristics just pointed out, the marks of each age, should be the student's task. He should aim, not only to enjoy the peculiar charm of each poem, but to feel, in these poems, as a whole that progress, that onward movement that makes of literary history the story of human thought. It is a story still unfinished, but we may yet, from the meaning of the past, learn to interpret the present, and perhaps even to conjecture the future.

LYRIC POETRY

To make clear precisely what differentiates lyric poetry from poetry of every other kind is by no means easy. The term lyric does not indicate that such poetry is to be actually sung: many of the most celebrated lyric poems have never been set to music. It does indicate, however, that such poetry, whether intended for reading or singing, has certain qualities peculiar to song,—that it is, both in spirit and form, a kind of poetry suitable for singing.

What qualities make poetry suitable for singing? It must in the first place, have intensity of feeling. It must have a certain directness and simplicity. It must have a form with a flowing and marked and simple rhythm. Let us look at the significance of each of these requirements.

All poetry is marked by a certain intensity of feeling. A poet aims not so much at informing his reader, or convincing him, as at making him participate in some emotion. What information is given,—take, for instance, the description of the daffodils in Wordsworth's poem (301)—is given not for its own sake, but simply because the poet wishes the reader to share his feelings about it. In poetry that is not lyric, or that is lyric only in passages, the poet gives much beside the direct presentation of the emotion and its inspiring cause. He may, as in Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, follow the hero through a series of adventures, he may, as in Shakspere's Macbeth, trace out the moral deterioration of a once noble character, or he may, as in Browning's La Saisiaz, go deeply into speculation upon life and immortality. The motive for the poem, in each case, is the poet's desire to communicate, not the sight or thought itself, but the feeling that it arouses within him. Yet in these poems the facts are so complex, the comparatively prosaic passages so many, that, except in detached passages, these poems have little of the character of song.

In a lyric poem, the information necessary to enable the reader to share in the poet's emotion is reduced to the minimum. Of all poets the lyric poet is the most impatient. He cannot tell a long story: he must get instantly at the passion. In Auld Robin Gray (192) and Fair Helen (135) stories are told, but they are told abruptly, impatiently. Like a person overcome by the sight of a catastrophe, the poet is too excited to explain. A song is brief, impassioned,—not a story, but the soul of a story. Homer wrote the epic of the anger of Achilles. The lyric poet would merely sing how wonderful and terrible that anger was. A lyric is as little inclined to profound philosophy as to detailed narration. The best hymns are songs of simple earnest feeling, not statements of theological belief. Wordsworth's Ode on the Intimations of Immortality is a lyric because its philosophy is pervaded with emotion: the poet does not state his belief; he sings the wonder of it.

A lyric poem is, consequently, poetry in its purest form, with the slightest intermixture of any alien elements. It is all feeling. It dwells as lightly as it may on the matter-of-fact and the prosaically intellectual. And, for this very reason, almost every lyric is short. No ecstacy can be of long continuous duration;* one cannot remain long upon such spiritual heights.

Most lyric poetry, just because it is of the nature of song, tends to be impersonal. The joy or grief that is sung may be the poet's own, but he instinctively tends to idealize it, to treat it with a largeness that will appeal to all. It is not every emotion that can inspire lyric verse. Its true inspiration must lie in some feeling that belongs not to the little daily self that dies at each sunset, but to the greater self, the self that abides to the end of life and beyond,—or even to that universal self of which each is a part, the self of the whole human race. A perfect lyric must speak to and from the heart of all mankind.

It is not then true, in spite of Macaulay's often quoted statement, that the lyric poet sings his own personal emotions. They may have been his own, they may have been the passions he divined as existing in the heart of another. They assuredly, at the moment when he wrote, were felt as his own, but, as they found utterance in song, they were broadened and deepened into feelings that exist and cry for utterance in every heart. Had Annie Laurie merely expressed one young Scotchman's love, it would never have become the song of a world of lovers. The reason that Auld Lang Syne is sung almost from pole to pole, is not that it tells what Burns felt, but that Burns, in it, has sung what all men feel.

* See Poe's essay,—The Rationale of Verse.

The form of lyric poetry inclines to the form of song. Its metres flow freely, its rhythms are marked. Nor can one distinguish sharply between sound and sense. The sound belongs to the impression that the poet would convey,—it is inseparable from it. A true lyric does not need to be set to music: it is music, a singing in speech; its form one with its spirit, its body with its soul.

This, then, is the nearest that we can come to the definition of lyric poetry:—a short intense expression of some ideal emotion, embodied in singing verse. Or, if we would reduce our definition to one simple test, we may ask, regarding any given poem set before us, this question: has it the tone, the quality of song? For in this singing character lies the essence of lyric poetry.

THE ODE

The term 'ode' is hard to define, for it is applied to poems that have little in common. All, however, are lyric; all have a certain deliberate and sustained dignity. Mr. Gosse would content himself with this, applying the term to 'any strain of enthusiastic and exalted lyric verse, directed to a fixed purpose and dealing progressively with one dignified theme.' Some would add the requirement that an ode must, like Shelley's Ode to the Skylark (287) or Wordsworth's Ode to Duty (252) take the form of an apostrophe. This, however, would exclude a poem as obviously an ode as Collins' Passions. It seems difficult, therefore, to restrict the term further than in Mr. Gosse's definition.

The origin of the trouble is that the English ode is founded on two very distinct types: the Latin ode as written by Horace and the Greek ode as written by Pindar. The former is as a rule in simple stanzas, often of four lines only, and uniform throughout the poem,—precisely equivalent to the stanzas of our ordinary English verse. An excellent idea of the character, both in form and matter, of the Horatian ode, allowing for differences resulting from the absence of rhyme in Latin and for differences in metri-

cal form, may be obtained from Marvell's Horatian Ode (88), Collins' Ode to Evening (186), Pope's Solitude (154) and similar poems by Wooton and Campion (95 and 79). Such an ode was seldom, except incidentally, a direct address. It was a dignified lyric of a certain seriousness. It is this type of ode that many English poets have imitated,—upon which, indeed, a great deal of English lyric verse is founded.

The Greek ode is of more complicated sort. The Horatian ode was written, like most English odes, for reading. The Greek ode, of the Pindaric type, was written for singing by chorus. This fact involved certain peculiarities of form. Instead of short stanzas, we have stanzas long and elaborate, conforming to certain rules and principles of Greek choral art. Such stanza or strophe, accompanied by certain movements of the choral dance, must be repeated precisely in the antistrophe, or the return movement of the chorus. A different kind of stanza might be used in the epode or after-song. Some odes introduced a second strophe and antistrophe, a second epode, etc., but the general type remains the same. It is this type that we find imitated in Gray's Bard (159) and his Progress of Poesy (177). In both we have three groups, each composed of strophe, antistrophe, and epode, the antistrophe repeating in each group the form of the strophe, while the three epodes correspond approximately to each other. (The strophe and antistrophe in any one group, do not, of course, correspond with the strophe and antistrophe in another.) Collins wrote a number of odes in a similar form, his Ode to Fear and his Ode to Liberty, for example, though neither is included in this book.

This form of ode is not especially suited to English poetry. Little of our verse is sung, and, even in verse composed for singing,—in Dryden's two odes (86 and 151) for example,—the chorus maintains a fixed position. Without the choral dance, the exact correspondence of strophe and antistrophe loses its effect, the ear being no longer aided by the eye,—unless one regard the effect upon the printed page. The English writer is therefore tempted to depart from the strict Pindaric form and to do deliberately what writers of an earlier date did through ignorance.

The earlier English writers of the ode, Cowley being one of the first to attempt it on the 'grand scale,' knew little, if anything, of the laws that governed the structure of Greek choral verse. To them the Greek lyrist seemed to follow, unrestrained, the inclinations of his metrical caprice. The earlier English ode, then, the ode of Cowley and Dryden,—for Drummond's poem (4) is too short to be regarded as an ode,—was written in any arrangement of long and short lines that seemed likely to prove effective. Later writers, either seeing little value in a strict obedience to rules founded on long past conditions, or experimentally, like Collins in his Passions, departed deliberately from these rules, and most modern poets have followed their example.

In Wordsworth and writers since the Romantic movement, the treatment is more free than in Cowley or Dryden. The greatest difference lies in the general spirit. In Dryden, for instance, one feels a tendency to make the conformity of sound to sense artificial. His metre must be one that his intellect will approve as appropriate. In Wordsworth the tendency is rather to let the metre take shape, so to speak, from within, to let the poem assume the rhythm in which the idea wishes to sing itself.

Some odes, like the Ode to Duty (252) or the Ode to a Nightingale (290), combine a long and varied stanza, suggestive of the classic strophe, with the continuous repetition throughout the poem that marks both the stanza of the Horatian ode and of native song. Spenser's Prothalamion (74) is a very complex illustration of such a form, Milton's Hymn on the Nativity (85) a comparatively simple one. Such a mingling of types is decidedly good. The English drama, the Shaksperean sonnet, the English government, the English people themselves and the tongue that they speak, are examples of just such fusions of type, the new product far surpassing the elements that gave it being.

With regard to the form of the strophe itself,—that is, of the long stanza to be found in any of what one may call the Pindaric types of ode,—no particular rule can be given. In most very formal odes, the iambic pentameter is made the metrical basis, varied by lines of three, four, two, or six feet, the latter usually occurring at the close of the stanza. Some odes, however, are based upon the four-foot line, like the Ode to Duty; others, like the Ode to the Skylark, upon the line of three feet. The real rule lies in the judgment or, better, the poetic instinct of the poet himself.

Students wishing to study examples of odes constructed in very strict conformity with both the classical rules and the classical spirit, should consult Mr. Swinburne's. His play Erechtheus illustrates no less admirably the same principles as applied to the choral ode in drama.

THE SONNET

Odes, while important, one might say monumental, works, are few. The sonnet, however, is one of the most common of literary forms. While its limitation—the restriction to fourteen lines and the more or less prescribed rhyme-system—in a way confines and hampers a writer, it serves, at the same time, to enforce compression, to necessitate polish, to prescribe, in short, that his diamond of thought shall appear cut into brilliant facets and mounted in a setting that brings out its beauty.

Of the sonnet as of the ode, we shall find two chief types, and, as in the case of the ode, we shall find that English poetry inclines to attain the effects it desires, if neither type seems adequate, by free combination of elements from both.

The sonnet came to England from Italy, and it is in the poetry of Milton (in the poems included in this volume) that we first see it in the strict Italian form. Sonnet 93 illustrates it perfectly. We have first a group of eight lines (called the octave), here printed, it happens, in two groups of four. These eight lines contain but two rhymes, a and b, each four times repeated in the order a b b a a b b a. Following this is a group of six lines (called the sestet), here printed in two groups of three lines each, with two rhymes, in the order c d c d c d. In the former group, the octave, no variation of the rhyme-system is permitted. In the sestet, however, almost any variation is allowable provided that the stanza does not end with a couplet. Often a third rhyme is introduced into it. In 94, we have the order c d e c d e; in 99, we have c d c e e d; and a large variety of arrangements is possible.

While the sonnet came from Italy, the form was adopted and somewhat varied by French poets. Perhaps Shakspere and his contemporaries in their variations from the regular type were influenced by French models. They seldom adhere to the strict Italian form. Sidney comes near it, but prefers to make his exit in a ringing couplet. Shakspere himself follows one uniform type, resembling the Italian in little but the number of lines. His sonnet is composed of three four-line stanzas, each with the rhyme-order a b a b, the rhymes changing with each stanza. The whole is 'rounded off' by a couplet, usually sharply detached in sense as well as form from all that precedes.

Each form has its own kind of effectiveness. In the Shaksperean sonnet there is a steady movement up to the closing couplet, which may either sum up the thought that has preceded, as in 14, or may surprise the reader by some sudden epigrammatic turn, as in 39. In the Italian form, the octave presents certain facts or thoughts, which in the sestet may be moralized upon, illuminated with a new significance, or made the subject of an emotional outburst. The Italian sonnet is the better, in so far as it gives, in its long sestet, a better chance for a worthy conclusion than the compressed coup-

let. For such a thought as that of 43, where the whole conception is summed in the couplet, the Shaksperean form seems better; for one like 99, calling for a more balanced 'return,' the Italian might have excelled. In too many of Shakspere's sonnets the final couplet is the weakest point.

Most modern sonnets are of the Italian type, though making variations very freely. In Wordsworth's sonnets (254, 255, 336) we find a new rhyme inserted in the octave. Shelley (in 293) evolves a sonnet form of his own. A writer is guided chiefly by the consideration that one form or another will better suit his thought.

Of later writings in sonnet form, the student is particularly advised to read the sonnets of Mrs. Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and Charles Tennyson Turner. David Main's Treasury of English Sonnets contains many excellent examples; and a number are included in the Second Series of Palgrave's Golden Treasury.

OTHER LYRIC FORMS

Of other forms, no one is so frequently used as to call for general explanation. The stanza forms, leaving out of consideration those more complex types considered under the ode, are usually variations of the simple four-line stanza. This, whether rhymed in couplets or with alternate rhyme, may be regarded as the great basis of all English stanza forms. One of its simplest types, in lines alternately of four feet and three, the simple metre of the old ballads, occurs in a very great part of English lyric verse.

Certain foreign forms of stanza, the Italian ottava rima, for example, have influenced English poetry. So have certain artificial French types, the rondeau and rondel, but these have left little trace upon the poems here gathered. The student who would analyze verse-forms thoroughly, will do well to consult some elementary chapter upon metre, such as is found in most works upon grammar and rhetoric. A more advanced work, suggestive to the mature student, is Sidney Lanier's Science of English Verse.

One particular group of poems (162, 192, and 264), are based on a somewhat exceptional principle of metre, which is briefly indicated in the notes. For a full explanation of it, the student is referred to Sidney Lanier's book (see above), chapter vi.

BOOK I

(Palgrave's notes are inclosed in single quotation marks, and followed by P.) The first number in bold-faced type refers to the poem; the second, if any, to the line of the poem.

'The Elizabethan Poetry, as it is rather vaguely termed, forms the substance of the first book, which contains pieces from Wyatt under Henry VIII. to Shakspere midway through the reign of James I., and Drummond who carried on the early manner to a still later period. There is here a wide range of style;—from simplicity expressed in a language hardly yet broken-in to verse,—through the pastoral fancies and Italian conceits of the strictly Elizabethan time,—to the passionate reality of Shakspere: yet a general uniformity of tone prevails. Few readers can fail to observe the natural sweetness of the verse, the single-hearted straightforwardness of the thoughts:—nor less, the limitation of subject to the many phases of one passion, which then characterized our lyrical poetry,—unless when, as in especial with Shakspere, the "purple light of Love" is tempered by a spirit of sterner reflection. For the didactic verse of the century, although lyrical in form, yet very rarely rises to the pervading emotion, the golden cadence, proper to the lyric.

'It should be observed that this and the following Summaries apply in the main to the Collection here presented, in which (besides its restriction to Lyrical Poetry) a strictly representative or historical Anthology has not been aimed at. Great excellence, in human art as in human character, has from the beginning of things been even more uniform than mediocrity, by virtue of the closeness of its approach to Nature:—and so far as the standard of Excellence kept in view has been attained in this volume, a comparative absence of extreme or temporary phases in style, a similarity of tone and manner, will be found throughout:—something neither modern nor ancient, but true and speaking to the heart of man alike throughout all ages.'—P.

With the exception of Wyatt—whose work looks back to the work of the court-poets of mediævalism, the contents of this book are of one spirit. It dwells rather upon the grace of the world that we see and move in, than upon any deeper significance in that life, —its deepest note, indeed, being a lament that it cannot find such significance. Its most striking merits are first, its unmistakable energy and freshness of feeling; secondly, its peculiar genius in the making of inspired phrases, its capricious gracefulness in metrical form,—and, last, by no means least, visible through all its superficial artificialities, its firm grip upon the realities of life. It does not sing of an imagined world as poetic: it sees the poetry of the real world. Its poetry is not, therefore, an artificial product, a thing apart from the life of each day, but a thing eminently of it, blossoming in it and from it.

Of the poets represented in this book, Shakspere stands of course most prominent. His sonnets represent, in depth and intensity and in perfection of emotional phrase, the best of the period. Their note is almost always one, —the tragedy of the fact that this beauty of life is so brief,—that it is so wonderful, and that there is yet so little of it. Too many of the sonnets of the day tend unduly to the conventional song of simulated passion. In these, we feel the writer's earnestness. There is much contention whether they deal with the poet's own life. Whether they tell of it or not, they most certainly speak from it. Whether the occasions, the particular circumstances alluded to in the sonnets were those of Shakspere's own life or merely creations of his imagination, the emotions, the views expressed, are unmistakably his own.

'Wordsworth said finely of Shakspere: "Shakspere could not have written an Epic; he would have died of plethora of thought." This prodigality of nature is exemplified equally in his Sonnets. The copious selection here given contains many that will not be fully felt and understood without some earnestness of thought on the reader's part. But he is not likely to regret the labor.' P.

The sonnets are not, indeed, easy reading. Shakspere's inventive profusion has packed them with wealth, 'infinite riches in a little room.' The images run riot, the sentences are impeded by their weight of thought. Yet the music of the lines, the very bewildering abundance of imagery, the flashing unexpectedness of phrase, set them apart from all other literary compositions.

Of the songs of this period, some are from plays, others are collected from compilations of the time. It was an age of lyric verse. The songs, often daintily fantastic both in form and substance, embody the lighter spirit of the day. Often a refrain, meaningless in itself, indicates that the song was composed with a view to actual singing. A few (like 79) have a compression which shows that the writer already felt the influence of Horatian verse.

One may roughly divide the writers of the period into three classes: dramatists, whose songs or sonnets are incidents in their literary work; courtiers and men of the world, whose leisure moments sought expression in lyric form; and poets whose chief work was lyric,—professional writers of songs. The latter class is the exception,—with no representative but Campion and, perhaps, the authors of a few anonymous songs. The group of men of action and affairs is far better illustrated by Sidney, Raleigh, and Donne. The largest group is that of playwrights,—Shakspere, Marlowe, Greene, Nash, Webster, etc. The notable thing is that the professional lyrist was rare, or else that his songs were too poor to survive. The age of Elizabeth was not an age of single activities. Men sang in the intervals of an earnest and energetic life.

1. Nash is one of the minor dramatists of Shakspere's day. This song is from a comedy, Will Summer's Testament. The imitative refrain indicates that this is intended for actual singing. The metre is nominally five-foot iambic. The actual reading, however, indicates rather a less regular form, somewhat similar to that noted in 162 and 192, with four accents to the line. Palm: what in America is called pussy-willow. The English name refers to its use in connection with Palm Sunday.

2. The capricious metre is typical of the time. Note the sudden change in lines 6 and 7.

3. Like 2 in its form. Whist: hushed, quieted.

4. Of a type more deliberately literary, with classical imagery. Some parts suffer from the author's learning; in others he breaks out into that sudden glory of phrase that we associate with Milton or Shakspere. (See lines 7 to 12, 39 to 40.) Rouse Memnon's mother: 'Awaken the Dawn from the dark earth and the clouds where she is resting. Aurora in the old mythology is mother of Memnon (the East), and wife of Tithonus (the appearance of Earth and Sky during the last hours of Night). She leaves him every morning in renewed youth, to prepare the way for Phœbus (the Sun), whilst Tithonus remains in perpetual old age and grayness.' P. decore: adorn. purely white: a diamond, according to the Roman mode of marking a lucky day by a white stone. By Peneus' streams: 'Phœbus loved the nymph Daphne, whom he met by the river Peneus, in the vale of Tempe.' P. Amphion's lyre: 'he was said to have built the walls of Thebes to the sound of his music.' P.

5. (Sonnet 64.) For sonnets in general see pages 381 and 382. Shakspere's sonnets fall into two general groups, the first addressed to some young friend and love, the second to some Dark Lady, whose evil influence he cannot resist. Those quoted here, like all but 51 and 78, are from the first series. As the order followed is not that generally adopted by editors of the sonnets, the usual number is in each case given.

The thought is that his friend's beauty, though subject to death, shall yet be made immortal in the poet's verse. mortality: death. sometime: once. eternal modifies brass. state: fixed condition. The antecedent of which is thought.

6. (Sonnet 65.) Continuing the idea of the sonnet preceding. This rage: mortality. hold a plea: present any defence.

7. 'A fine example of the highwrought and conventional Elizabethan Pastoralism, which it would be unreasonable to criticise on the ground of the unshepherdlike or unreal character of some images suggested. Stanza 6 was perhaps inserted by Izaak Walton.' P. It has not, however, the artificiality of many other pastorals, and has a daintiness and simplicity that catch the spirit of the open fields. Marlowe stands second to Shakspere in height of genius, and possibly even surpasses him in lyric flights. His personality in some respects anticipates Shelley's. Lyric as his genius was, he wrote few songs, his lyric power appearing in his plays and rather impairing their dramatic reality. May-morning: stress the first syllable strongly, and the last will receive a slight 'rebounding' accent.

8. 'This beautiful lyric is one of several recovered from the very rare Elizabethan Song-books.' P.—It is another instance of the capricious song, already illustrated in 1, 2, and 3. Omnia vincit: he conquers all.

9. Not certainly Shakspere's. Note its resemblance to the song that precedes it.

10. From As You Like It, a graceful summons to the 'simple life.'

11. From the same play, embodying the prevalent feeling of the brevity of joy.

12. Donne is here represented only by this poem. His work, though full of genius, marks the decline of the Elizabethan spirit in its substitution of ingenious notions, 'conceits,' for sincere simplicity. The metre of this passage is no less ingeniously fantastic than the thought. mettle: temper. settle: fix, make constant. mortality: death.

13. 'Sidney's poetry is singularly unequal. At times he is heavy and even prosaic; his simplicity is rude and bare; his verse unmelodious. These, however, are the "defects of his merits." In a certain depth and chivalry of feeling,—in the rare and noble quality of disinterestedness (to put it in one word),—he has no superior, hardly perhaps an equal, amongst our Poets; and after or beside Shakspere's Sonnets, his Astrophel and Stella, in the Editor's judgment, offers the most intense and powerful picture of the passion of love in the whole range of poetry.' P.—His sonnets, at their worst, have the sugary artificiality of the imitators of the followers of Petrarch. At their best, they are not far behind the best of Shakspere's. Sidney as a man stood, it should be remembered, as the ideal knight and gentleman of his age, the perfect pattern of chivalry. This sonnet, observe, conforms to the Italian model. (See page 382.) Via Amoris: the way of love. Hundreds of years: '"The very rapture of love," says Mr. Ruskin; "A lover like this does not believe his mistress can grow old or die."' P.

14. (Sonnet 57.) Written when his friend had gone away from him. world-with-out-end hour, a compound typically Elizabethan. suppose: depending on dare. in your will: can believe no wrong in your intention.

15. (Sonnet 97.) In this case the writer had been absent from his friend. time removed: time of his absence. big: pregnant. prime: the season of vigor, the spring. hope of orphans: 'expectation of the birth of children whose father is dead.' Dowden.

16. (Sonnet 29.) A sonnet of context entirely different. To the poet in his depression, the thought of his friend, like sunlight, dispels the night of discontent. with friends possesst: possessed of them.

17. (Sonnet 109.) This is upon the topic of 15. Love is renewed after absence and estrangement. In all his wanderings in place and thought, his love has never really changed. qualify: modify. just to the time: punctual to it. with the time exchanged: changed by it. to leave: as to leave.

18. (Sonnet 104.) Another phase of the most common subject —time and beauty. process: advance, progress. which yet: the antecedent of which is you. steal from his figure: move stealthily away from the figure on the dial.

19. From a pastoral romance, in imitation of Lyly's Euphues. A bit of the Renaissance delight in the rediscovered beauty of the human body. Note the effect of the sudden change of metre at the end. 'Readers who have visited Italy will be reminded of more than one picture by this gorgeous Vision of Beauty, equally sublime and pure in its Paradisiacal naturalness. Lodge wrote it on a voyage to "the Islands of Terceras and the Canaries;" and he seems to have caught, in those southern seas, no small portion of the qualities which marked the contemporary Art of Venice.' P.—The clear:

'is the crystalline or outermost heaven of the old cosmography.' P. —For a fair there's fairer none: 'if you desire a Beauty there is none more beautiful than Rosaline.' P.

20. Perhaps by a professional masque-writer and lyrist, Anthony Munday (1553 to 1633). fond: foolish.

22. 'From an Elizabethan songbook.' P.

23. (Sonnet 18.) The poet rejoices that his pen can make his friend's beauty immortal. The beginning may refer to Spenser's comparison of his love to a summer day. that fair thou owest: 'that beauty thou ownest.' P.—untrimmed: stripped of adornment.

24. (Sonnet 106.) Poets of the day, the poet complains, have not the skill to sing such beauty as his friend's. blazon: description. master: own, possess.

25. 'From one of the three Song-books of T. Campion, who appears to have been author of the words which he set to music. His merit as a lyrical poet (recognized in his own time, but since then forgotten) has been again brought to light.' P. Swerring: is a conjecture for changing in the text of 1601.' P. Much of Campion's other work is even superior to that quoted in this volume. His verse excels in grace. The titles given to poems in this collection, it should be remembered, are often those of Palgrave. Basia: kisses.

28. Of a period much earlier than the other poems of this book, more in the spirit of mediæval love-lyrics, less learned and ingenious than the Elizabethan. Note the refrain, identical with the opening words of each stanza. travail: toil. service: a word once regularly used of the lover's expression in act and word of his devotion. thine own approved: him who is proved to be thine.

29. One of the few good Scottish poems of this period. prejudge thy bliss: injure thy bliss by premature judgment.

30. In Lacrimas: (break) into tears; see Aeneid iv., 413. keep: abide. parts: qualities.

31. (Sonnet 116.) A lyric expression of the abstract truth that true love can overcome all errors, all trials and obstacles. impediments: in reference to the marriage service, 'cause or just impediment.' mark: 'a great sea-mark standing every flaw.' Coriolanus, v., iii., 74. the star, etc.: 'apparently, whose stellar influence is uncalculated, although his angular altitude from the plane of the astrolabe, or artificial horizon used by astrologers, has been determined.' P.—not time's fool: not the victim of sport or time.

32. 'This lovely song appears, as here given, in Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589. A longer and inferior form was published in the Arcadia of 1590.' P.—One of the poems approaching Shakespere's manner. The form, with one exception in the use of rhyme, follows the French rondel.

35. Carpe Diem: seize the day; a famous phrase from an ode of Horace (I, xi). It urges the wisdom of taking pleasure while one can. From Twelfth Night, ii., iii., 40. The inevitable Elizabethan subject. sweet-and-twenty: a pretty phrase for a pretty age.

36. Autolycus: see Shakspere's Winter's Tale. brave: showy, handsome. Compare the Scotch braw.

37. From Love's Labour's Lost. Note the Elizabethan realism. keel: cool by stirring. saw: wise moral discourse. crabs: crab-apples.

38. (Sonnet 73.) Dealing with thoughts of age and coming death. Compare Macbeth, v., iii., 23. Death's second self: Cf. Macbeth, ii., ii. His: for its, a word not then in use.

39. (Sonnet 30.) This sonnet properly follows 16, 'A Consolation.' 'That, however, is occupied with present wants and troubles, this with past grief and loss.' Dowden.—sessions: the figure is of a court. dateless: endless. expense: loss. foregone: past.

40. One of the noblest of Elizabethan sonnets. Its subject is one that appealed to a time of restless activity. (Cf. Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentinian, v., ii.; Shakspere, 2 King Henry, iv., iii.; Macbeth, ii., ii.) The closing couplet seems, to modern taste, rather an anticlimax, a fall from the height. baiting-place: a place for refreshment, and hence for rest. prease: press. rosy garland: garland of roses.

41. (Sonnet 60.) Once more the old subject: beauty as the prey of time.—'Nativity, once in the main of light: when a star has risen and entered on the full stream of light:— another of the astrological phrases no longer familiar.' P.—Nativity denoted the moment of birth in its relation to the position of the heavenly bodies. The passage then means: The life that begins under the influence of heavens flooded with radiance (a 'main' or sea of light) crawls to maturity, where, though it win brief success, the interference of malignant influences fights against it, and time that gave now takes away. 'Crooked eclipses: as coming athwart the Sun's apparent course.' P.—Nature's truth: the true handiwork of nature. times in hope: times anticipated.

42. (Sonnet 87.) A despairing farewell. He is unworthy of the love he has enjoyed and may no longer hope for it. determinate: expired, a legal term, the legal figure being carried out in patent: a grant of privilege, and in the phrase, upon misprision growing: which probably means 'granted in error.' The figure as a whole means that the friend's grant of a right to love him having expired, he has not renewed it, seeing that it had been granted under a mistaken impression.

43. (Sonnet 94.) In the sonnet that usually precedes, Shakspere 'has described his friend as able to show a sweet face while harboring false thoughts: the subject is enlarged on in the present sonnet.' Dowden.—The thought is that those who, repressing passion in themselves, can yet move it in others, such men husband heaven's gifts, masters of their own faces, while making others serve their purposes. Selfish though they be, their beauty can bless the world. Yet, if corrupt, they are doubly odious.—'With the tone of this Sonnet compare Hamlet's "Give me that man That is not passion's slave," etc. Shakspere's writings show the deepest sensitiveness to passion:—hence the attraction he felt in the contrasting effects of apathy.' P.

44. See note on 28. There is a somewhat similar use of the refrain.—grame: 'sorrow.' P.

45. Extremely pretty, though not arousing deep feeling. The student should look up the story referred to.—'Pandion in the ancient fable was father to Philomela:' P.—See also note to 47. sitting: as I sat. up-till: against, upon.

46. Compare 40. Daniel is not widely read, possibly because, while his genius was lyric, his work lies mainly in 'world-without-end' epic and heavy tragedy. His best work is in his sonnets.

47. A poem with more feeling than 45.—'In the old legend it is now Philomela, now Procne (the swallow) who suffers violence from Tereus. This song has a fascination in its calm intensity of passion; that "sad earnestness and vivid exactness" which Cardinal Newman ascribes to the master-pieces of ancient poetry.' P.—Thy thorn without: thy thorn is outside thee; my grief is within.

48. Frustra: in vain. From Measure for Measure, iv., i. (By some attributed to Fletcher, as it appears also in a play by him.) Note the pretty, echoing repetition.

49. Drayton, like Daniel, expended much of his energy in works quite unreadable. His Ballad of Agincourt, however, still lives, and this sonnet, one of the most perfect in English literature. G. Wyndham calls it a "wonderful sob of supplication." Observe the abrupt turn in thought in the closing couplet. cleanly: completely. love: here identical with passion, his referring to it. Note the reality of the personifications as compared with those in Book iii.

50. In Imagine, etc.: 'man walketh in a vain shew.' Psalms xxxix. 6. The Common Prayer version reads 'vain shadow.'

51. (Sonnet 148.) One of the two drawn from the 'second series,' addressed to the Dark Lady, who was either not beautiful, —fascinating by her personality —or whose beauty was not of a type then admired. The speaker struggles against his love as unreasonable, even dishonorable, yet cannot but yield to it. censures: 'judges.' P.

52. 'Exquisite in its equably-balanced metrical flow.' P.— secure: free from anxiety.

53. 'Judging from its style, this beautiful example of old simplicity and feeling may perhaps be referred to the earlier years of Elizabeth.' P. —The simplicity seems rather of the courtly sort. But the picture is charming.

54. self-proof: experience.

56. From As You Like It, ii., vii. Pessimism and misanthropy moderated to suit the tone of a comedy. Contrast the earnest bitterness of Timon or Lear. The refrain hails the honesty of nature, the enduring green of its holly in contrast to man's treachery.

57. 'Printed in a little Anthology by Nicholas Breton, 1597. It is, however, a stronger and finer piece of work than any known to be his. St. 1. silly: simple. dole: grief. chief: chiefly. lap: wrap.' P. St. 3, If there be. . . . 'obscure: Perhaps if there be any who speak harshly of thee, thy pain may plead for pity from Fate.' P.—Compare 60 and 143.

58. Wordsworth later used the first two lines of this sonnet to introduce a sonnet of his own, of very different substance. That busy archer: 'Cupid.' Descries: 'used actively;' points out: '"The last line of this poem is a little obscured by transposition. He means, Do they call ungratefulness there a virtue?"' (C. Lamb).' P. —long-with-love-acquainted: compare the similar phrase in 14.

59. O Crudelis Amor: O cruel love. A typical compound of the tragic and fantastic, with some trace of the repression of Horace. White Iope: suggested by a passage in Propertius (iii., 20).' P.— masques, revels, tourneys, triumphs: Cf. L'Allegro.

60. From a play, Menaphon. wanton: playful child. Wag is used in a similar sense.

61. Compare with the style of 4.

62. From Twelfth Night, ii., iv. cypres: crape. ramage: confused noise. turtle: turtle-dove. still: always. her: of her who is dead.

63. A lute: The student should observe that a lute is a stringed instrument.

64. Fidele: faithful. From Cymbeline. Note the suggestive value of the word 'golden.' consign: add their names to thy (Death's) register.

65. From the Tempest, i., ii., following number 3 in this book.

66. From the White Devil, a play of great though unpleasant power. '"I never saw anything like this funeral dirge," says Charles Lamb, "except the ditty which reminds Ferdinand of his drowned father in the Tempest." As that is of the water, watery; so this is of the earth, earthy. Both have that intentness of feeling which seems to resolve itself into the element which it contemplates.' P.—crystal: fairness.

67. (Sonnet 32.) The poet's imagination of his own death and his anticipative elegy. lover: friend. of better equipage: better equipped.

68. (Sonnet 71.) Upon a similar supposition, though introducing very different thoughts. If he be the first to die, then let his friend speedily forget him. Note the imitative effect in 'surly, sullen bell.'

69. From the Merchant of Venice, iii., ii., the casket scene. Fancy: love, especially the wayward, impulsive love of youth.

70. 'Paraphrased from an Italian madrigal.' P.—An excellent illustration of a 'graceful conceit.'

71. From the same source as 19. It has the same graceful, though effeminate fancy. like a bee: imagery that suggests Theocritus and his contemporaries.

72. Another typical 'conceit' by the famous author of Euphues, —a long and most artificial 'pastoral romance' in a very unnatural style, full of deliberately balanced constructions, artful alliterations, quaint conceits,—and everything but simple good sense. It has, however, the merit noted on page 368.

73. From a play. Note the fresh breezy tone.

74. Written in honour of the Ladies Elizabeth and Katherine Somerset. Nowhere has Spenser more emphatically displayed himself as the very poet of Beauty: the Renaissance impulse in England is here seen at its highest and purest. The genius of Spenser, like Chaucer's, does itself justice only in poems of some length. Hence it is impossible to represent it in this volume by other pieces of equal merit, but of impracticable dimensions.' P.—This does not represent Spenser so justly as does his Faerie Queene. That, narrative though it purports to be, is yet so full of dreamy emotion and the charm of sound as to be chiefly lyric. Spenser, unlike most poets, could remain lyric without interruption. Few readers, however, can retain the lyric mood so continuously. The tone is so unreal, the music so sweet, that one constantly lapses from attention. It is like trying to listen to a lullaby so soothing that one cannot remain awake to hear it. In this Prothalamion the two ladies are represented under the guise of two swans, though this figure, like most of Spenser's allegorical ideas, is not consistently maintained. The intricate stanza is maintained without variation throughout. It is singularly sweet 'the melting voice in mazes running.' Observe the use of the refrain.

St. 1, Titan: the sun. long fruitless stay: Spenser's own search for favor and help. Thames: The Thames above London is still beautiful and swans are still to be seen there. rutty: marked with water tracks, or 'rooty.' painted: variously colored. paramours: lovers. against the bridal day: to prepare for it.

St. 2, greenish locks: Compare the blue-haired deities in Milton's Comus. entrailed: twisted. featously: elegantly. flasket: diminutive from 'flask.'

St. 3, Lee: a river that enters the Thames below Greenwich. St. 6, assail: dispel. St. 7, shend: 'shame.' P. St. 8, There whilome wont the Templar-knights: For the Temple, see description of London. St. 9, a noble peer: 'Robert Devereus, second Lord Essex, then at the height of his brief triumph after taking Cadiz: hence the allusion following the Pillars of Hercules, placed near Cades by ancient legend.' P.—St. 9, Eliza: Elizabeth. twins of Jove: the stars Castor and Pollux. baldric: 'belt; the zodiac.' P.—tide: time.

75. Dekker was a writer of no small powers, though so much of his work was done in collaboration that it is hard to assign him the credit he deserves.

76. Note the definiteness of the one thought. Sic Transit: thus it passes.

78. (Sonnet 146.) Another from the second series, once more dealing with the familiar problem of life and death. Note the figures drawn from the law, a type of simile very common in Shakspere. foiled by is substituted by conjecture, for the meaningless repetition, 'my sinful earth,' in the original text. 'Pressed by,' another emendation not here adopted, seems better. array: adorn, or beset as a beleaguering army; possibly intended to call up both images, as the body clothes the soul and corrupts it. terms divine: longer, divine periods of time. For the last line, see 1 Corinthinians xv. 26.

79. 'This lyric may with high probability be assigned to Campion, in whose first Book of Airs it appeared (1601). The evidence sometimes quoted ascribing it to Lord Bacon appears to be valueless.' P.—Compare 95, or Horace's Integer Vitæ (Odes, i., 22).

82. (Sonnet 66.) We return to the first series, where the love is thought of as good, not evil,—the one thing worth living for. As to the rest of life, the poem has the despondency of Lear and Hamlet. as: such as, namely. disab-l-éd: apparently in four syllables. Note the figure in line 12, and the balance with which it is presented.

83. By the 'noble peer' mentioned in Spenser's Prothalamion (74). unhaunted: unfrequented. then wake again: supply 'he should.'

84. With a seriousness that anticipates Puritanism. Perhaps Palgrave placed it here to show that the Elizabethan lack of moral seriousness, their failure to find a significance in life, was the 'little rift within the lute' that was to silence all their singing. Wonderful as Shakspere's sonnets are, no age that meets the riddle of life with their despairing answer, can long continue.

BOOK II

'This division, embracing generally the latter eighty years of the Seventeenth century, contains the close of our Early poetical style and the commencement of the Modern. In Dryden we see the first master of the new: in Milton, whose genius dominates here as Shakspere's in the former book,—the crown and consummation of the early period. Their splendid Odes are far in advance of any prior attempts, Spenser's excepted: they exhibit that wider and grander range which years and experience and the struggles of the time conferred on Poetry. Our Muses now give expression to political feeling, to religious thought, to a high philosophic statesmanship in writers such as Marvell, Herbert, and Wotton: whilst in Marvell and Milton, again, we find noble attempts, hitherto rare in our literature, at pure description of nature, destined in our own age to be continued and equalled. Meanwhile the poetry of simple passion, although before 1660 often deformed by verbal fancies and conceits of thought, and afterwards by levity and as artificial tone, —produced in Herrick and Waller some charming pieces of more finished art than the Elizabethan: until in the courtly compliments of Sedley it seems to exhaust itself, and lie almost dormant for the hundred years between the days of Wither and Suckling and the days of Burns and Cowper.' P.

Book Second, as the Introduction has pointed out, is transitional. It contains the closing work of the Elizabethan period, the first work of the Period of French influence or Classicism, and—partaking of the qualities of both, yet above and apart from them—the work of Milton. It contains, besides, examples of the simple songs which developed in Scotland, uninfluenced by the forms of fashionable letters, and awaited the time when the world should appreciate their beauty.

In Milton's work, the summit of the period, we have a union of spontaneous feeling and formal art, of the Romantic and classical spirits. His emotions never lead him to depart from a certain statuesque restraint, yet we never feel that this is assumed in slavish imitation of models. We never, it is true, forget that he is the scholar, that Greek and Latin letters are as vital a part of his living experience as the heather and the mountains were in the experience of the Scottish ballad-writer. What he imitated, what he constantly referred to, was not a learning laboriously acquired, but the one thing that had given him the greatest delight.

In his later work (here represented only by the sonnets) one feels the growing intensity of his Puritanism. The idea, introduced in the Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity, that the beliefs of Greece and Rome were opposed to Christianity, had grown from a poetic fancy to a sober belief. Images from the Old Testament take the place of allusions to classic literature, and the tone of the verse, still sobered by classical restraint, is tinged with the peculiarly mystical imagery of the Orient. Even in Lycidas, one feels the beginnings of austerity as Milton turns from the beautiful—though not profoundly sincere—lament for his friend, to rebuke the corruption of the clergy. He has seen the fruits of the paganism of the Renaissance, and, however deep his appreciation of beauty, he feels no less deeply the need of an intention in life. His L'Allegro, it is true, lives for the day only, but Il Penseroso, the more serious self, looks to the end of all his days, and expresses an almost Wordsworthian hope of attaining ability to spell out the significance of star and herb.

Milton's verse is slow, weighted with ponderous syllables that give dignity. It has the richness of organ or of orchestra. Its irregularities are deliberate. It is, on the whole, the closest approach in English to the blank verse of the ancients,—formal, yet free; ordered and restrained, yet instinct with feeling and rich in varied music.

Between Milton and Dryden there lies a gulf, not of years, but of ideals. Just as in Milton we see the moral reaction from the immoral excesses of the pagan Renaissance, so in Dryden we see the formal reaction from the artistic excesses that accompanied the decline of Elizabethan literature.

The two poems of Dryden's here included do not illustrate his most important contribution to English letters—the development of the satire in the heroic couplet,—the work that, carried on by Pope, gave to English verse for almost a century its peculiar character. These two poems illustrate, however, both the deliberate mastery of form attained by Dryden and the comparative lack of real feeling that accompanies this.

Both poems represent imitatively a series of passions. Both are in irregular form, varied not by any fixed rule, as in the strict Pindaric ode (see pages 379, 380) but to suit the different emotions that the poet would present. 'Present' is used rather than 'express,' for the emotions are rather exhibited coldly than uttered as emotions sympathetically felt by the poet. (See page 371.) The allusions, personifications, etc., are especially artificial. It is the age when the gods and goddesses of Homer were supposed to have been inserted deliberately by the poet as a literary 'machinery,' to produce effect. Compare the mythological allusions, and personifications in Dryden, or even in Gray and Collins, with those in Keats or Shelley, and observe how much more earnestness, how much more of belief in their own imaginations, there is in the latter.

Why are such odes worth careful study? Because, though lacking the thrill, the suggestive passion of poetry more truly lyric, they have a proportion, a harmony, a fitting of means to end, from which a student may learn much. They are wonderful studies in the technique of verse. And they do not lack a certain larger appeal to the imagination. They compare with the earlier and later lyrics much as St. Paul's Cathedral compares with the chapels of Westminster. It has nothing of their richness of detail, their unexpectedness of genius, but it has a stately classicism, a vastness of design that, in its own peculiar way, is no less impressive.

Of minor writers of the school of Dryden, but one is represented in this book,—Edmund Waller, who did perhaps as much as Dryden to introduce the heroic couplet, though he accomplished less in developing its peculiar powers. The writers of this school were, however, as has been said in the Introduction, little fitted—except in the formal ode—to accomplish much in lyric poetry. The other lyrics in the book are for the most part taken from the writers who carried on, even into the Restoration, the spirit of the Elizabethan lyrics.

Of these was Ben Jonson, who, for all his superabundance of learning, could yet at times command the simplicity of the lyric poem. Chief of the group is Robert Herrick, who so feelingly expressed the prevailing sense of the pathetic brevity and pitiful meaninglessness of life. Yet his view has never the depth or intensity of the sonnets of Shakspere. Clergyman as he was, he seldom made the brevity of life more than a plea for enjoyment while life lasted. Nor was the enjoyment of which his poems sung always innocent. He was such a clergyman as Milton may well have had in mind in Lycidas. Yet, while we condemn his view of life, we can only enjoy the sense of joy in his best verse,—a joy made perhaps the sweeter by the contrasted image of the coming end.

> 'Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
> Come, my Corinna! come, let's go a Maying.'

Like Herrick, with something of the same grace, are Carew, Suckling, and Lovelace, the latter with a bit more of the gallant cavalier. Vaughan and Herbert in religious poetry show, with all their art and imagination, the tendency to far-fetched conceits carried further by Donne, whom one might set down as the last of Elizabethans,—the last flicker of the light before extinction.

A writer who must stand by himself is Marvel, a chameleon-like person, who reflected the varied influences of his very varied age. In his Horatian Ode on Cromwell's Return (88), he writes almost with the sobriety of Milton; in The Girl Describes her Fawn (141), he exceeds Waller in sugary sentimentalism; in his Thoughts in a Garden (142), he resumes almost the tone of Vaughan or Herbert. His vane shifts to every flaw. One might say that he embodied the literary history of his century.

The three Scotch lyrics, as has been said, stand out of any period of formal literature. They belong to an eternal class, the lyrics that speak without artifice, with neither knowledge of or regard for fashion, straight from the heart of the poet.

85. Composed at Cambridge, begun on Christmas morning, 1629. It is based on the idea that at Christ's coming the old gods fled from earth. The opening stanzas are in the so-called Rhyme Royal used by Chaucer and his successors, a modification of the Italian ottava rima. Milton varies it by making the closing line of each stanza an Alexandrine (six feet). The remainder of the poem is in eight line stanzas of a structure readily seen, affording a movement at once sweeping and majestic. Observe the richness of allusion, the masterly use of the suggestion of proper names. St. 1, deadly forfeit: forfeit (penalty) of death. release: remit. with His Father: by his influence with. St. 2, darksome house: the body, the soul's house. St. 4, touch'd with hallowed fire: see Isaiah vi. 6, 7. St. 7, harbinger: to prepare his way. turtle: the dove, emblem of peace. St. 8, hooked chariot: its wheels armed with hooks or blades.

St. 9, whist: hushed. birds of calm: halcyons; see classical dictionary. St. 10, influence: used with reference to astrology. Lucifer: the light-bearer, the star that warns of the approach of morning. St. 12, than: then. Pan: Christ, who came to depose the old Lord of Nature. silly: simple. St. 13, stringed noise: music of harps. St. 15, unexpressive: not to be expressed in words.

St. 16, Sons of morning: see Job xxxviii. 4 to 11. St. 17, crystal sphere: a reference to the belief that the planets were set in nine concentric spheres, whose turning made music, too fine for human hearing. ninefold: There were nine inner spheres, a tenth sphere enclosing them all. consort: 'Milton's spelling of this word, here and elsewhere, has been followed, as it is uncertain whether he used it in the sense of accompanying, or simply for concert.' P.

St. 20, ychained: chained; y survives from a Saxon prefix ge, analogous to the same prefix in German. wakeful: awakening. St. 21, spread: display. St. 22, But now begins: begins only from this moment. The Old Dragon: see Revelation xx. 2; 'laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years.' P.—swinges: brandishes.

St. 23, The oracles are dumb: an allusion to an old belief. Note the use of the proper names in the passage following. (See Macaulay, Essay on Milton, paragraphs 21 to 24.) St. 25, Lars and Lemures: 'household gods and spirits.' P. Flamens: 'Roman priests.' St. 26, That twice-battered god: 'Dagon, see Samuel v. 3.' P.—Thammuz: see note on Osiris below. St. 27, Moloch: cf. Paradise Lost, i., 392; Psalms cvi. 38; Jeremiah vii. 31: Ezekiel xvi. 20. St. 28, Osiris, 'the Egyptian god of Agriculture (here, perhaps by confusion with Apis, figured as a Bull), was torn to pieces by Typho and embalmed after death in a sacred chest. This myth, reproduced in Syria and Greece in the legends of Thammuz, Adonis, and perhaps Abysyrtus, may have originally signified the annual death of the Sun or the Year under the influences of the winter darkness.' P. Horus: 'the son of Osiris, as the New Year, in his turn overcomes Typho.' P. St. 28, 'unshower'd grass: as watered by the Nile only.' St. 31, Bright-harness'd, 'armoured.' P.

86. St. Cecilia was the patron saint of music. Her purity of life, according to the original legend, drew an angel down from heaven. Later versions attribute his adoration to her music. She was reputed to have been the inventor of the organ. This poem, like 151, was written to be set to music. This accounts for the variations in form and for the frequent repetitions. For its general characteristics, see Introduction, pages 379 and 380.

St. 1, Harmony: the Pythagoreans saw in number the secret of the universe and the key to all arts. In music, the art of measured time, lies the secret of the universe. frame: structure of the universe. cold and hot: the four elements of early science. compass: range. The diapason closing full in man: man completing the full harmony. (Diapason indicates a harmony extending through all the notes.)

St. 2, passion: violent feeling of any kind. Jubal: see Genesis iv. 21. chorded shell: the first lyre, a tortoise shell, with cords stretched across. What passion cannot music: introducing the 'imitation' of the passions. Cf. 151, also 178.

St. 3, mortal alarms: calls to battle. St. 4, lute: see note on 63. St. 7, sequacious: following (a word abominably pedantic). St. 8, So when the last: the strongest passage in the poem. The conceit, however, of music, by the last trumpet, untuning the sky, i. e., ending the harmony that it created, is too fantastic to be truly imaginative.

87. An illustration of Milton's Puritan earnestness. The Late Massacre: 'The Vaudois persecution, carried on in 1655 by the Duke of Savoy. No more mighty sonnet than this "collect in verse," as it has been justly named, probably can be found in any language. Readers should observe that it is constructed on the original Italian or Provençal model.' P.—To the editor of this revision, this particular sonnet seems to lack lyric movement, to speak, rather than to sing. worshipt stocks and stones: Milton's view of the Catholic use of images. Triple tyrant: the Pope, with his triple crown, or tiara. Babylonian woe: Papacy, identified by Puritans with the Babylon of Revelation xvii. and xviii.

88. (For Marvell, see page 399.) This has the condensed form, and to some extent, the resulting obscurity, of the odes of Horace, the form of which the stanza imitates. 'Cromwell returned from Ireland in 1650, and Marvell probably wrote his lines soon after, whilst living in the Fairfax household. It is hence not surprising that (St. 21–24) he should have been deceived by Cromwell's professed submissiveness to the Parliament, which, when it declined to register his decrees, he expelled by armed violence:—one despotism, by natural law, replacing another. The poet's insight has, however, truly prophesied that result in his last two lines.' P.

St. 4, The blaze of his genius had to break out. 'The meaning of St. 5 is, "rivalry or hostility are the same to a lofty spirit, and limitation more hateful than opposition."' P.—St. 8, highest plot: chief concern. bergamot: a kind of pear-tree. 'The allusion in St. 11 is to the old physical doctrines of the non-existence of a vacuum and the impenetrability of matter.' P.—St. 12, He contrived that Charles should remove himself, as a result of his own fears, from Hampton Court to Carisbrooke Castle. In St. 17 the allusion is to the omen traditionally connected with the foundation of the Capitol.' P.—'The ancient belief that certain years in life complete natural periods and are hence peculiarly exposed to death, is introduced in St. 26 by the word climacteric.' P. St. 27, particolored: variable, with incidental reference to the colors of the plaid. St. 28, mistake: fail to find. St. 29, erect: ready to strike.

89. With regard to Il Penseroso, L'Allegro, Lycidas, and Gray's Elegy, see Preface. Lycidas: 'The person here lamented is Milton's college contemporary, Edward King, drowned in 1637 whilst crossing from Chester to Ireland.

'Strict Pastoral Poetry was first written or perfected by the Dorian Greeks settled in Sicily: but the conventional use of it, exhibited more magnificently in Lycidas than in any other pastoral, is apparently of Roman origin. Milton, employing the noble freedom of a great artist, has here united ancient mythology, with what may be called the modern mythology of Camus and Saint Peter,—to direct Christian images. Yet the poem, if it gains in historical interest, suffers in poetry by the harsh intrusion of the writer's narrow and violent theological politics.'—See lines 48 to 51.—'The metrical structure of this glorious elegy is partly derived from Italian models.' P.

St. 2, Sisters of the sacred well: 'the Muses, who frequent the Pierian Spring at the foot of Mount Olympus,' P.—The seat or home of Jove was supposed to be on this mountain. gentle muse: poet. St. 5, Mona: 'Anglesea, an island near Wales;' Deva: 'the Dee——places near the scene of the shipwreck.' 'Orpheus was torn to pieces by Thracian women.' St. 6, Amaryllis and Neæra: 'names used here for the love-idols of poets: as Damœtas, previously for a shepherd.' the blind Fury: 'Atropos, the Fate who cut the thread of life.' P.—Here called a Fury because hateful. St. 7, Arethuse and Mincius: 'Sicilian and Italian waters here alluded to as representing the pastoral poetry of Theocritus and Virgil.' oat: 'used here like Collins' oaten stop, St. 1, no. 186, for Song.' Hippotades: 'Æolus, god of the winds.' Panope: 'a Nereid. Panope seems to express the boundlessness of the ocean-horizon when seen from a height.' St. 8, Camus: 'the Cam: put for King's University.' 'The sanguine flower: the Hyacinth.' The Pilot: 'Saint Peter, figuratively introduced as the head of the Church on earth, to foretell "the ruin of our corrupted clergy," as Milton regarded them, "then in their height" under Laud's primacy.' scrannel: 'screeching.' The wolf: 'a few conversions to Roman Catholicism had recently occurred.' St. 9, Alphéus: 'a stream in Southern Greece, supposed to flow underseas to join the Arethuse.' swart star: 'the Dog-star.' rathe: 'early.' moist vows: 'tearful prayers.' Bellerus: 'a giant to personify Belerium, the ancient title of Land's End.' The great Vision: 'the story was that the Archangel Michael had appeared on the rock by Marazion in Mount's Bay which bears his name. Milton calls on him to turn his eyes from the south homeward, and to pity Lycidas.' Namancos and Bayona: 'places in Spain, south of Marazion.' St. 10, ore: 'rays of golden light.' St. 11, Doric lay: 'Sicilian, pastoral.' P.

90. A poem to be read in connection with the two that follow. It has the dignity of the great nave of the abbey itself. mortality: mortal man. they lie, had realms: supply 'who.' royallest: Westminster contains tombs of many monarchs. once dead: dead once for all.

91. From a masque. Like 90 and 92, Elizabethan in type. more quaint: much in the sense of 'subtle.'

92. garlands: crowns for the victors.

93. 'The assault was an attack on London expected in 1642, when the troops of Charles I. reached Brentford. "Written on his door" was in the original title.' P.—colonel: here with three syllables. The Emathian Conqueror: 'When Thebes was destroyed, Alexander ordered the house of Pindar to be spared.' P. The repeated air: 'When the Spartan confederacy in 404 B. C. took Athens, a proposal to demolish it is said to have been rejected through the effect produced by a chorus from the Electra of Euripides.' P.

94. Ere half my days: he became blind at the age of 44. And (how) that one talent (is) lodged. light denied: when light is denied. Fondly: foolishly. who best bear: supply antecedent, 'those.' thousands: of angels. post: travel speedily, post-haste.

95. In the spirit of certain odes of Horace, a poem which, like the one that follows, is worth memorizing. still: always.

96. From an ode.

97. With some Elizabethan oddities of thought, yet sincere and graceful.

98. 'In imaginative intensity, Vaughan stands beside his contemporary Marvell.' P.—In some respects he resembles Herbert. The general idea of this poem, that the world corrupts the spotless purity of the child who dimly remembers his life before birth, should be compared with the idea of Wordsworth's Ode on the Intimations of Immortality, (338). my second race: second state of existence.

black art: evil ability. shootes of everlastingness: flashes of a sense of eternal life. City of Palm trees: Paradise. In that state (in which) I came: the state of 'angel infancy.'

99. The opening lines echo Horace: 'O matre pulchra, filia pulchrior.' (Ode I., 16.) Favonius: 'the spring wind.' P. spare to interpose them oft: use them moderately.

100. This and the preceding, both written in the prime of Milton's life, show the more genial side of Milton's character.—'Themis: the goddess of justice. Skinner was grandson to Sir E. Coke:—hence Milton's allusion to the bench. Sweden was then at war with Poland, and France with the Spanish Netherlands.' P.

101. Campion belongs rather in Book I. (See page 387.) Tritons: extended to cover all attendants of Neptune. empery: imperial power.

102. From Cynthia's Revels. Compare Milton's songs in Comus. Hesperus: the character who sings the lines. excellently: excellingly.

103. Thoroughly Elizabethan, perverse, with neither plan nor restraint, yet charming. (Certain stanzas, dwelling monotonously on her beauty, are omitted.) St. 10, Sidneian showers: 'either in allusion to the conversations in the Arcadia, or to Sidney himself as a model of "gentleness" in spirit and demeanour.' P. —St. 13, forespent: wasted. St. 17, weave them: weave for themselves. St. 21, my fictions, but her story: may these imaginations of mine prove truth regarding her.

104. Very irregular in metre, but with great spirit. A charming old melody goes with it. receipt of a fly: room to admit it. fast she lay: get herself caught fast. lose him: escape him. stoop to: descend upon prey at a sign,—here more probably, descend obediently to perch upon.

105. 'Delicate humor delightfully united to thought, at once simple and subtle. It is full of conceit and paradox, but these are imaginative, not intellectual only.' P.—Make the example yours: treat you in the same fashion.

106. Almost a sequel to the idea of the foregoing.

107. With, as Walpole said of the author, 'more wit than poetry.'

108. See page 398.

109. A poem widely quoted, a perfect bit of sincere gallantry.

110. She was daughter of James I. The lines have more feeling than one expects in the formal tribute of a courtier.

111. 'Lady M. Ley was daughter to Sir J. Ley, afterwards Earl of Marlborough, who died March, 1629, coincidently with the dissolution of the third Parliament of Charles' reign. Hence Milton poetically compares his death to that of the Orator Isocrates of Athens, after Philip's victory.' P. —killed with report: the news of it killed him. old man eloquent: a phrase often quoted.

112. Between the Elizabethans and the work of Waller.

113. Whenas: seeing that. sunk: suspended.

114. borrow: take.

115. Far above the general level of its author's work.

116. Rosy wreath: wreath of roses.

117. Almost certainly by Campion. Cherry-ripe is the cry of the street venders of cherries.

118. Showing Herrick at his best. 'A masterpiece of grace and gentle feeling' P.—(See Introduction, page 399.) In England it was formerly the custom to go out early on the first morning of May to fetch blossoms and hawthorn boughs, with which doors and windows were decorated. against you come: to provide for your coming. (Cf. 74, line 18.) Titan: the sun. The god unshorn: imberbis, i. e., beardless, Apollo. beads: 'prayers.' P.—each field a street: so thronged with people. each street a park: so adorned with boughs. left to dream: left off dreaming. green-gown: 'romp in the new mown hay.' Bell.

119. Typical of another side of Herrick's nature. Stomacher, see dictionary.

120. taketh me: enchants me. (Cf. line 13 of the preceding.)

121. With a difference in tone.

122. Pale: enclosure, such as surrounds a deer-park.

123. 'With better taste, and less diffuseness, Quarles might have retained more of that high place which he held in popular estimate.' P.

124. Protestant: champion.

126. very thee: thee, and no other.

127. From Prison: 'to which his active support of Charles I twice brought him.' P. committed: 'to prison.' P. with no allaying Thames: not diluted with water. careless: free from care. enlarged: at large, free.

128. With allusion to Platonic theories concerning spiritual nature. blue-god: Neptune, god of the blue sea.

129. One of the few included poems that inclines to humor. Cf. 131.

130. More in the style of Dryden. numerous: in numbers, i. e., metrical, musical. virtue: peculiar power or usefulness.

131. In accord with the author's 'motto' in another poem: 'nec habeo, nec careo, nec curo.' 'I have not, need not, and heed not.' (Cf. 129.)

132. Published later than Il Penseroso, but some think it may have been written earlier. One poem certainly influenced the other.

133. A poem of the simple group of folksongs (see note on 136) from Percy's Ballads. The usual title is Waly, Waly. Waly waly: 'an exclamation of sorrow.' Brae: 'hillside;' burn: 'brook;' busk: 'adorn.' Saint Anton's Well: 'below Arthur's Seat by Edinburgh.' Cramasie: 'crimson.' P.

134. 'This beautiful example of early simplicity is found in a song-book of 1620.' P. Compare this simplicity, however, with that of 133 or 135.

135. From Scott's collection, Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, as is also the poem following. See note on 133. burd: maiden.

136. Note how the story is developed by suggestion. Corbies: 'crows;' fail: 'turf;' hause: 'neck;' theek: 'thatch.'—'If not in their origin, in their present form this, with the preceding poem and 133, appear due to the Seventeenth Century, and have therefore been placed in Book II.' P.

137. This seems, while not so great a work of poetic art, to spring from more sincere grief than Milton's Lycidas. Stanzas 5 and 6 are comparatively weak. 'The poetical and the prosaic, after Cowley's fashion, blend curiously in this deeply-felt elegy.' P.

138. A poem worth careful reading. Note the phrases, 'whose light doth trample on my days' and 'jewel of the just,' survivals of the Shaksperean manner.

139. On his favorite theme, as is 140. Both are very dainty in metrical form. pledges: offspring. pride, beauty: what they are proud of.

141. 'Perhaps no poem in this collection is more delicately fancied, more exquisitely finished. By placing his description of the Fawn in a young girl's mouth, Marvell has, as it were, legitimated that abundance of "imaginative hyperbole" to which he is always partial: he makes us feel it natural that a maiden's favorite should be whiter than milk, sweeter than sugar—"lilies without, roses within." The poet's imagination is justified in its seeming extravagance by the intensity and unity with which it invests his picture.' P.—(The editor of this edition cannot share Palgrave's appreciation. To him the poem seems, in the greater part, false and sentimental.)

142. Both this and the preceding should be compared with Marvell's Horatian Ode (88). Marvell here throws himself into the very soul of the Garden with the imaginative intensity of Shelley in his West Wind.' P.—This praise seems extreme. A much worthier poem than the preceding, with Elizabethan richness. The closing lines of stanza 6 are often quoted. amaze: perplex. palm, oak, bays: honors in war, statesmanship, letters. amorous: lovely. curious: exquisite. vest: vestment, here, the body. dial: a floral clock, made of flowers opening at different hours of the day. Zodiac: course.

143. In the manner of Book I, where it would belong. Fortunati Nimium: more than happy. lash out: spend recklessly. happy: strong. crabs: crab-apples. tutties: nosegays. silly: simple.

144. See Preface on page vii. 'It is a striking proof of Milton's astonishing power, that these, the earliest great Lyrics of the Landscape in our language, should still remain supreme in their style for range, variety, and melodious beauty. The Bright and the Thoughtful aspects of Nature and of Life are their subjects: but each is preceded by a mythological introduction in a mixed Classical and Italian manner.' P.—The two poems should be studied together as contrasted pictures. Each difference in plan is significant of some difference in content. (See page 397.) l. 12, yclept: named. l. 45, to come: probably in the same construction with to hear. l. 60, his state: his royal progress across the sky. l. 62, in liveries dight: like the courtiers attending the monarch. l. 67, tells his tale: counts his sheep. l. 80, Cynosure: centre of observation. l. 83, Corydon, Thyrsis: Shepherd names from old pastorals. (See note on Lycidas.) l. 92, upland: rural. l. 94, rebeck: primitive violin. l. 105, tells: the subject is implied in the form. l. 117, Towered cities please us then: in imagination; the poet travels by reading. l. 122, influence: a reference to astrology. l. 132, learned sock: learned comedies. The sock was the shoe worn in Greek comedy; for learned see page 370. l. 136, Lydian airs: pleasant, lively music. l. 138, the meeting soul: the soul drawn forth to hear it. l. 141, wanton heed and giddy cunning: a deliberate contradiction in terms.

145. (See first notes on the preceding.) l. 3, bested: avail. l. 6, possess: occupy. l. 10, pensioners: attendants. l. 35, Cipres: crape. l. 36, decent: comely. l. 46, with gods doth diet: enjoys spiritual food. l. 54, cherub: see Ezekiel i. and x. l. 57, plight: mood. l. 59, Cynthia: the Moon. l. 88, Hermes: refers to a neo-Platonic work ascribed to an Egyptian philosopher. unsphere: bring back by reading his works. l. 109, him that left half-told: Chaucer, in his Squire's Tale. l. 124, the Attic boy: her lover Cephalus. l. 130, minute drops: falling each minute. l. 148, wave at his wings: move at his wings, or perhaps come at the waft of his wings. l. 153, to mortal's good: good to mortals. l. 158, massy-proof: so massy as to be proof against the weight they bear. l. 170, spell: to interpret concerning.

146. Resembling 142 rather than 141. The Emigrants are those who fled from England during the reign of Charles I. prelate's rage: a reference to Laud. but apples, etc.: a bit of riotous Elizabethan imagination.

147. Probably written at Cambridge. phantasy: imagination. concent: 'harmony.' P.—noise: music. diapason: see note on 86, l. 15. consort: see note on 85, St. 17.

148. Nox Nocti Indicat Scientiam: 'night unto night showeth knowledge.' Ps. xix. 2. proud dangers traffic for: for which he endures the dangers of battle, proud expressing a conscious dignity in this endurance and a splendour in the danger.

149. 'A lyric of a strange, fanciful, yet solemn beauty:—Cowley's style intensified by the mysticism of Henry More.' P.

151. 'Entitled A Song in Honor of St. Cecilia's Day, 1697.' P. Composed, therefore, ten years after 86. This has, perhaps because of the larger treatment of each passion, more feeling than 86, but it lacks any very strict stirring emotion. Its merit is in form and design. The direct object of the poem is the presentation of a series of emotions. (See page 398.) The emotions represented are: first, pride in divine descent; second, revelry in drink; third, grief and pity; fourth, love; and, last, an unreasoning fury to destroy. (For a similar array of passions more sympathetically presented, see Mr. Kipling's ballad, The Last Rhyme of True Thomas.) Persia won: the conquest of Persia, accomplished by Alexander, 333 B. C. desert: merit. Thais: Alexander's love. None but the brave: note the artificial repetition. Timotheus: a musician who is said once to have deeply moved Alexander by his flute-playing. (Dryden here has varied and enlarged on the story.) The song began from Jove: Alexander was declared, by flatterers, to be the son of Libyan Jove, who, disguised as a serpent, had visited Alexander's mother, Olympias. affects to nod: imitates the solemn earth-shaking nod with which Zeus signified approval. Darius: the last King of Persia, defeated by Alexander. the next degree: but one step from pity. Lydian: light, pleasant music. the many: the crowd. unburied: to Greeks a bitter disgrace. flambeau: torch. another Helen: caused the war that caused the burning of Troy. vocal frame: the organ. added length: referring to the sustained notes of the organ. mother-wit: natural, 'born' ability. The last two lines, while clever, lack sincerity.

BOOK III

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

'It is more difficult to characterize the English Poetry of the Eighteenth Century than that of any other. For it was an age not only of spontaneous transition, but of bold experiment: it includes not only such absolute contrasts as distinguish the Rape of the Lock from the Parish Register, but such vast contemporaneous differences as lie between Pope and Collins, Burns and Cowper. Yet we may clearly trace three leading moods or tendencies:—the aspects of courtly or educated life represented by Pope and carried to exhaustion by his followers; the poetry of Nature and of Man, viewed through a cultivated, and at the same time an impassioned frame of mind by Collins and Gray:—lastly, the study of vivid and simple narrative, including natural description, begun by Gay and Thomson, pursued by Burns and others in the north, and established in England by Goldsmith, Percy, Crabbe, and Cowper. Great varieties in style accompanied these diversities in aim: poets could not always distinguish the manner suitable for subjects so far apart: and the union of conventional and of common language, exhibited most conspicuously by Burns, has given a tone to the poetry of that century which is better explained by reference to its historical origin than by naming it artificial. There is, again, a nobleness of thought, a courageous aim at high and, in a strict sense manly, excellence in many of the writers:—nor can that period be justly termed tame and wanting in originality, which produced poems such as Pope's Satires, Gray's Odes and Elegy, the ballads of Gay and Carey, the songs of Burns and Cowper. In truth Poetry at this, as at all times, was a more or less unconscious mirror of the genius of the age: and the many complex causes which made the Eighteenth Century the turning-time in modern European civilization are also more or less reflected in its verse. An intelligent reader will find the influence of Newton as markedly in the poems of Pope, as of Elizabeth in the plays of Shakspere. On this great subject, however, these indications must here be sufficient.' P.

As has been pointed out in the Introduction, Book Third does not represent the really typical verse of the Eighteenth Century, which is not lyric in character, but which tends rather to satire, the study of the peculiarities of man as conforming to or departing from certain artificial rules for the conduct of life. It is an age of reason, rather than enthusiasm; commonsense, rather than aspiration. What lyrics are at all typical of such a period are either, like 172, uninspired exercises in a fixed form of expression, or, like Sally in our Alley (167), are the poetic outcome of the half-mocking, half sympathetic scrutiny that made Sir Roger de Coverley and the Vicar of Wakefield. Typical too perhaps is such clever verse as Prior's (173), a lyric variation of Pope's Rape of the Lock. The one lyric of Pope's, as has been pointed out, is one written at the age of twelve, while he was saturated with the influence of Horace. In general, comparing Book Third with the others, one is struck by the fact that, if we except the work that belongs distinctly outside of the period represented, the age is lacking in lyric product. We have, it is true, the formal ode, yet it cannot be said that, in this, we have precisely the lyric. The ode can be lyric, as one sees in Wordsworth, Keats, and Shelley. The formal ode, however, (see page 379) is, in the Eighteenth Century rather a set exercise than a free expression. It is constructed, rather than sung. And yet, even in this form, two poets, full of the lyric spirit, contrived, despite its artificiality, to find a certain expression for their feeling.

Gray and Collins are both out of sympathy with the age of Pope. Being in it, however,—not like Burns, apart from its influence, or like Blake, so eccentric as to be able to disregard it, they are unable to bring out the best that is in them. According to Matthew Arnold, Gray would have written far better and far more had he been born a half century later. 'A born poet, he fell upon an age of prose. . . . Born in the same year with Milton, he would have been another man; born in the same year with Burns, he would have been another man . . . he was a man born out of date, a man whose full spiritual flowering was impossible.' In Gray's Elegy, he speaks from his deeper self, though in it we find none of the hopefulness of the new age. In his odes, however, he regards too much the form of the models he is imitating, neglecting both their spirit and the true significance of his subject. We find in them the metrical forms of his predecessors, their allusions, their personifications, their elaborately contrived similes. Yet we do not find that spirit, which, in the odes of Pindar and the choruses of Sophocles, gave life and reality to the whole. We find, to vary the figure Macaulay uses of Milton, not the grace and beauty of the ancient dress, but too often only their cast-off garb, worn with a difference. Their personifications resulted from their imagination; Gray's are too often contrived in an effort to stimulate it. His diction is governed rather by principles approved by critics than by his own instinct for the word that would express his thought. Like most of his day, he preferred the dignified general term to the definite, suggestive touch. There is too much of artifice, too little of the heat of true creative art.

Yet, through all these impediments, he makes one feel his essentially poetic nature. In single phrases, in swelling lines, in genuinely beautiful imagery, in such romantic visions as in some passages of The Bard, we feel what he really was, and what, under different conditions, he might have been. In The Bard, the use of the supernatural, the appreciation of the grandeur of the rugged scenery, the imaginative use of the element of horror,—all are in anticipation of Romanticism. Tempered as this wildness is by the shocking tameness of the 'soft zephyr,' 'the rich repast,' 'gales from blooming Eden,' and 'buskin'd measures,' yet the reader who is willing to attempt it, will be able to realize the really Titanic vision that lies within the poem.

In Collins, at his best, the ode is treated with an ease not found in Gray. It is a form more in accord with his genius, less a prison, more a dwelling where he is at home. He enters not only into its form, but, at least for considerable intervals, into its spirit. His odes have more of the character of song. His figures, especially his personifications, have more reality and spring more directly from imagination. His allusions arise from the thought. In many passages he seems, while using classic forms, to speak directly out of his own heart. In the Ode to Evening especially, the marble coldness of its statuesque form seems instinct with life,—there is a pulsing of blood beneath the marble.

Goldsmith, important in the transition, is hardly represented in this Book. In Cowper, however, one sees a writer far more in accord with the new spirit. Cowper, though his dates are early, yet wrote so late in life that he falls almost in the group represented in the book following. His seclusion of life, moreover, his avoidance of formal society, his fondness for nature, and the intensity, sometimes developing to insanity, with which he suffered the fear of eternal punishment,—all aided him to escape from the artificiality of his time. At his best, as in the two poems to Mary Unwin, he could be as unaffected as Burns; in other poems he alternates between simplicity and the conventional diction of the Eighteenth Century. In many there is a note of sadness, even of despair. An age that is finding its soul is often, like Undine, unhappy in the discovery.

In Burns we step from the literature of educated society to a literature independent of its rules. The literature of Scotland followed the traditions of its own song. In Book Second we saw in Fair Helen, Waly Waly, and the Twa Corbies, examples of a type of lyric whose rules were simple and whose emotion was sincere. Song of this type continued, in unbroken succession, to the days of Burns. He was the greatest of those who maintained, one may even say, revived it; yet even without him, in Auld Robin Gray and the pathetic Flowers of the Forest, it would have continued its course. It is important not only in itself but because of its influence. A world, ready for the new Romantic movement, turned eagerly to a literature that had preserved, into their own day, the freshness of true poetry. Like the brook in Sir Launfal, it had preserved through the winter the model for the new leafage.

Burns partook at once of the old and the new. Drawing inspiration from a past period of simple and sincere song, he stood, himself, on the brink of an age of revolution and felt, in anticipation, something of its spirit. The new doctrines of the equality of man, the essential nobility of human nature, the presence of God in his World,—these he learned from the age that was dawning. Freedom of verse and a simple diction he learned from native models and from his own earnestness. Love of nature, lofty imagination and sympathy with all human feelings,—these he had in his own heart.

In studying Burns's songs, one must realize that their form owes much to the old song of the border. Many are written to fit old Scotch melodies (to be found in many collections), sometimes to take the place of words either feeble or licentious. Sometimes he would preserve one stanza, sometimes simply the general rhythm of the discarded poem. He worked not only with, but in the song material of his own land,—adding, excising, varying, just as did the unknown ballad-singers in the centuries before him.

The importance of Burns lies not merely, as has been said, in his own work, but as much in the influence that he exerted, the inspiration that his example gave to an age that longed —though hardly knowing what it craved,—for poetry that spoke from, and to the heart.

Very similar to the position of Burns is that of Blake. Burns was separated from the artificiality of his age in place and protected from its influence by the free traditions of native song. Blake, in the very heart of artificial England of the day, was isolated (like the less gifted Smart) by the insane eccentricity of his own nature. Painter as well as poet, he stands, in thought and method, absolutely by himself. His longer works are little read. They are confused and incoherent, 'wild and whirling words,' the texture of a bewildered dream. His minor lyrics, however,—of which those included here are but a part—are among the most perfect in English literature. All are mystical, as strange as the designs that he drew to accompany them,—all with some mystic under-meaning—hints that one can but half follow, tantalizing, yet fascinatingly suggestive.

In these last, we find the freedom, the mysticism, the simplicity, the intensity of the best modern poetry. In the Third Book, as a whole, we have, as perfectly as lyrics can represent it, the whole course of a century of change, the transition from the literature of Law to the literature of Feeling.

152. This poem was left incomplete; fragments showing that at least two other stanzas were intended. vermeil: rather affected, but observe, 'tenderest, freshest green.' sullen year: sullen part of the year, i. e., winter. rosy pleasure: a rather empty personification. gale: breeze.

153. 'We have no poet more marked by rapture, by the ecstasy which Plato held the note of genuine inspiration, than Collins. Yet but twice or thrice do his lyrics reach that simplicity, that sinceram sermonis Attici gratiam to which this ode testifies his enthusiastic devotion. His style, as his friend Dr. Johnson truly remarks, was obscure; his diction often harsh and unskillfully laboured; he struggles nobly against the narrow, artificial manner of his age, but his too scanty years did not allow him to reach perfect mastery.' P. simplicity, as used in the poem, is defined in the first three lines. St. 1, Fancy, Pleasure: a continuation of rather formal personification. St. 2, decent: with modest beauty. St. 3, Hybla: 'near Syracuse.' Her whose . . . woe: 'the nightingale, "for which Sophocles seems to have entertained a peculiar fondness;" Collins here refers to the famous chorus in the Œdipus at Colonus.' P. St. 4, Cephisus: 'the stream flowing past Athens, and Colonus, the "green retreat."' P. enamelled: bright with flowers, a common use of the time. St. 5, to range their ordered hues: to arrange them so that they will be 'ordered.' St. 6, none: no other theme. stayed to sing: remained to sing only under the first of the emperors, Augustus. St. 7, 'refers to the [over-elaborate] Italian amourist poetry of the Renaissance: in Collins' day, Dante was almost unknown in England.' P. St. 8, meeting soul: 'which moves sympathetically towards simplicity.' St. 9, Of these: 'Taste and Genius.' P.—Cf. L'Allegro (144), l. 138.

154. Written at the age of twelve. It is so thoroughly in the spirit of Horace that, as Mr. Fowler points out, one unfamiliar with Latin might get from it some notion of the form and spirit of his odes. Compare Marvel's Ode on Cromwell (88), Campion's The man of life upright (79), and Wootton's Charecter of a Happy Life (95). See also page 379.

155. Cibber, a writer of some simplicity but little force. Pope has immortalized him by ridicule.

156. Deliberately over-done for comic effect. Observe 'Malignant Fate,' 'hapless Nymph,' 'angel forms,' with such contrasted descents to the commonplace as the last line of stanza 4. tabby kind, tortoise: Gray's friend had two cats, one 'tabby,' the other 'tortoise.' Gray was not sure which had died. Compare the description in stanza 2 with Chaucer's description of the beauty of Pertelote, Nonne Prestes Tale. With caution bold: cf. 'Festina lente' (hasten slowly).

157. Philips, like Cibber, endeavoring to be simple in an artificial age, became subject to ridicule. moduling: modulating.

158. Better patriotism than poetry. Its author is celebrated for his long blank verse poem, The Seasons, one of the first indications of the returning love of nature. Observe the inevitable personifications. generous: of noble race or nature.

159. 'Gray is probably the first of our poets who made some acquaintance with the rich and admirable poetry in which Wales from the Sixth Century has been fertile,—before and since his time so barbarously neglected, not in England only. In 1757, when this ode was completed, so little had been printed in regard to Welsh poetry, that it is hard to discover whence Gray drew his Cymric allusions. The fabled massacre of the Bards appears first in the family history of Sir John Wynn of Gwydir (cir. 1600), not published till 1773; but the story seems to have passed in MS. to Carte's History, whence it may have been taken by Gray. The reference to high-born Hoel and soft Llewellyn; to Cadwallo and Urien; may, similarly, have been derived from the Specimens of early Welsh poetry, by the Rev. E. Evans:—as, although not published till 1764, the MS., we learn from a letter to Dr. Wharton, was in Gray's hands by July, 1760, and may have reached him by 1757. It is, however, doubtful whether Gray (of whose acquaintance with Welsh we have no evidence) must not have been also aided by some Welsh scholar. He is one of the poets least likely to scatter epithets at random: "soft" or gentle is the epithet emphatically and specially given to Llewellyn in contemporary Welsh poetry, and is hence here used with particular propriety. Yet, without such assistance as we have suggested, Gray could hardly have selected the epithet.' P.

'The following ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales, that Edward I., when he completed the conquest of the country, ordered all the bards that fell into his hands, to be put to death.' G. (This initial indicates Gray's own notes.)

'After lamenting his comrades (st. 2, 3) the Bard prophesies the fate of Edward II., and the conquests of Edward III. (4): his death and that of the Black Prince (5): of Richard II., with the wars of York and Lancaster, the murder of Henry VI. (the meek usurper), and of Edward V. and his brother (6). He turns to the glory and prosperity following the accession of the Tudors (7), through Elizabeth's reign (8): and concludes with a vision of the poetry of Shakespeare and Milton.' P. —St. 1, Cambria: Wales. Glo'ster: son-in-law to Edward. Mortimer: one of the Lords Marchers of Wales.' P. couched: lowered into rest, ready to charge.

St. 2, High-born Hoel, soft Llewellyn: 'the Dissertatio de Bardis names the first as son to King Owain Gwynedd: Llewellyn, last King of North Wales, was murdered 1282.' Cadwallo: 'Cadwallon and Urien Rheged (early kings of Gwynedd and Cumbria respectively) are mentioned as bards.' Modred: 'this name Gray (it has been supposed) uses for Merlin, prophet as well as poet. The italicized lines mark where the Bard's song is joined by that of his predecessors departed. Whether intentionally or through ignorance of the real dates, Gray here seems to represent the Bard as speaking of these poets, all of earlier days, Llewellyn excepted, as his own contemporaries.' P.—It is more likely, as is suggested by Prof. Hales, that Gray merely appropriates the names of the old bards as the names of the slaughtered companions of the speaker.

Plinlimmon: a mountain on the borders of Cardigan. Arvon: the shores opposite Anglesea. grisly: hideous, horrible. weave: weave the woof together with, into connection with, the warp. (The warp is the part composed of fixed threads, the woof the part woven across it by the shuttle.) There is, in Scandinavian saga, a grim weaving vision of equal horror. St. 4, Berkley's roof: (or roofs) Berkley castle, where Edward II. was put to death. she-wolf: 'Isabel of France, adulterous queen of Edward II.' P. o'er thy country: the triumphs of Edward III. in France. The sense might be improved by a comma after 'hangs.' Amazement in his van: The reference is to the death of Edward III. 'Abandoned by his children, and even robbed in his last moments by his courtiers and his mistress.' G.

St. 5, sable warrior: Edward the Black Prince, who died some time before his father. the swarm: supply 'where are.' Fair laughs the Morn: referring to the 'magnificence of Richard the Second's reign.' G. Youth on the prow: the personifications are here more vivid, yet not quite natural. Sway: rather for the rhyme than for meaning.

St. 6, Fell Thirst and Famine scowl: 'Richard the Second (as we are told) was starved to death. The story of his assassination . . .

is of much later date.' G. Towers of Julius: the Tower of London, built in part, according to tradition, by Julius Cæsar. P. Henry VI., George, Duke of Clarence; Edward V.; Richard Duke of York; and others of noble blood, are believed to have been secretly murdered here. consort: 'Margaret of Anjou, a woman of heroic spirit.' father: 'Henry the Fifth.' meek usurper: 'Henry the Fifth was very near being canonized. The line of Lancaster had no right of inheritance to the crown.' G. –above, below: in the woven pattern. rose of snow, blushing foe: the white and red roses, the devices of York and Lancaster. twined: refers either to mingling in conflict or to junction of the two families in marriage. bristled boar: 'the badge of Richard III.' P.—infant gore: the murder of the two princes in the Tower.

St. 7, Half of the heart: 'Queen Eleanor died soon after the conquest of Wales.' Arthur: 'Henry VII. named his eldest son thus, in deference to native feeling and story.' P.—It was the common belief of the Welsh that King Arthur was alive and would return. genuine kings: the line of Tudor, of Welsh descent.

St. 8, strings symphonious . . . fairy fiction . . . buskin'd measures: the bard foresees the Elizabethan renewal of lyric poetry, comedy and tragedy. Taliessin: an early Welsh bard.

St. 9, repairs: renews; compare Lycidas, 169. He spoke, and headlong: The tragic close lacks reality. The bard is not a person whose fate we care about: his death is merely a convenient way of silencing him. But the real value of the poem is not dependent on this detail.

160. An illustration of the ode in little (see page 379). The personifications are imaginable. Note the calm movement of the verse, and the perfect unity.

161. One of the songs in which Burns appears rather as the ballad-singer than as the individual poet. Note the abrupt change of feeling in the middle of stanza 2. thou cruel lord: the Duke of Cumberland. Drumossie: the Highland name for the battle of Culloden, where the Young Pretender was crushingly defeated by the Duke of Cumberland, 1746.

162. A modern imaginative restoration of an ancient ballad, lost except for the one line here used as the refrain. The metre has four strong accents, each foot, as a rule, having three syllables, the accented syllable being very long, and the time very slow. Compare Auld Robin Gray (192), in which, as in this, the feet are based on four beats (like the dactyl of Virgil). See also 1 and 264. Flodden: where James IV. of Scotland and many of his followers perished in battle, 1513. lilting: 'singing blithely.' loaning: 'broad lane.'

P.—Forest: Ettrick Forest. bughts: 'pens.' scorning: 'rallying.' dowie: 'dreary.' dafin and gabbin: 'joking and chatting.' leglin: 'milkpail.' shearing: 'reaping.' bandsters: 'sheaf-binders.' lyart: 'grizzled.' rankled: 'wrinkled.' fleeching: 'coaxing.' gloaming: 'twilight.' bogle: 'ghost.' dool: 'sorrow.' P.

163. Combining the simplicity of the ballad with the graces of more formal literature. Compare it with the two songs preceding and note the difference in tone. marrow: mate.

164. 'The Editor has found no authoritative text of this poem, to his mind superior to any other of its class in melody and pathos. Part is probably not later than the Seventeenth Century: in other stanzas a more modern hand, much resembling Scott's, is traceable. Logan's poem (163) exhibits a knowledge rather of the old legend than of the old verses.' P. Hecht: 'promised.' mavis: 'thrush.' ilka: 'every.' lav'rock: 'lark.' haughs: 'valley-meadows.' twined: 'parted from.' syne: 'then.' P. Stanzas 1, 3 and 4 sound, at least in part, suspiciously modern.

165. 'The Royal George, of 108 guns, whilst undergoing a partial careening at Spithead, was overset about 10 A. M. Aug. 29, 1782. The total loss was believed to be nearly 1000 souls.—This little poem might be called one of our trial-pieces, in regard to taste. The reader who feels the vigour of description and the force of pathos underlying Cowper's bare and truly Greek simplicity of phrase, may assure himself se valde profecisse in poetry.' P.—'Given an ordinary newspaper paragraph, turn it into the simplest possible language, do not introduce a single metaphor or figure of speech, indulge in none but the most obvious of reflections, as for example, that when a man is drowned, he won't win any more battles—and produce as a result a copy of verse that nobody can read without instantly knowing them by heart.'—Sir Leslie Stephen. weigh the vessel up: raise her. (This proved impracticable.)

166. A very strange production, neither literature nor life. We see the peculiar spectacle of the elegant Mr. Gay endeavoring to give an imitation of the untutored feelings of the 'lower classes' as he imagines them. Compare with it the poem following, which accomplishes what this fails in. For a sincere farewell, see 168. Downs: off Goodwin sands, a common anchorage. jovial sailors: especially unreal.

167. 'A little masterpiece in a very difficult style. In grace, tenderness, simplicity, and humour, it is worthy of the Ancients: and even more so, from the completeness and unity of the picture presented.' P. See page 410. bang his bellyful: what might more elegantly be called 'his fill.' box it: enclose it as a gift.

168. Notice the direct earnestness of this as compared to the graces of William's farewell to his Sue, 166. tassie: goblet. service: a pledge of service. law: hill.

169. By one who, like Burns, had learned the native lessons of simple song.

170. We feel that we have left the open moor for the 'respectable residence.' Yet, allowing for this difference, the poem is most simple.

171. Rogers, while of later date, is of the thought and style of Thomson. His few best lyrics, rather than his dreary Italy, constitute his claim to notice.

172. 'Perhaps no writer who has given such strong proofs of the poetic nature has left less satisfactory poetry than Thomson. Yet this song, with Rule Britannia and a few others, must make us regret that he did not more seriously apply himself to lyrical writing.' P. Some cannot agree to this and will feel that the poem lacks both feeling and brilliancy.

173. Compare with the foregoing. It is no more sincere, but it has a certain sprightly grace, the manner of the man of society.

174. For Blake, see page 372. Notice the element of mysticism, the suggestion of more than any words can fully express. Observe, too, the irregular music of the form, the haunting use of repetition—'silently, invisibly'—the omission of all prosaic explanation. Such poetry may be hard to read. It is also hard to forget.

175. From the Vicar of Wakefield.

176. There are other versions; this is the most compressed.

177. With regard to the ode, see page 379. The poem presents the benefits received from poetry, its impetuous force, the soothing power of song, and its aid in the dance, the helpfulness of poetry in pain and sorrow, its influence over barbarous peoples, its aid to liberty, its history from the days of Greece to the time of Dryden. St. 1, Æolian lyre: the Greeks ascribed the origin of their Lyrical Poetry to the Colonies of Aeolis in Asia Minor.' P. Helicon: where are fountains sacred to the Muses, the source of the figurative stream of song. St. 2, Thracia's hills: 'supposed a favourite resort of Mars, the Lord of War. Feather'd king: 'the Eagle of Jupiter, admirably described by Pindar in a passage here imitated by Gray.' P.— St. 3, Cytherea: Venus. Idalia: in Cyprus, where she was especially worshipped. St. 4, Hyperion: the sun. St. 6, O'er Delphi's steep: The poet mentions all Greece, both mainland and the islands,—the various homes of Greek poetry. the sad Nine: sad because they must leave Greece in its decay. Latian plains: the neighborhood of Rome, which they likewise abandon upon the decline of liberty. Gray fails, however, to recognize the real eminence of later Italy in literature. St. 7, Nature's Darling: Shakspere, taught by nature rather than the schools. St. 8, He, that rode sublime: Milton, with reference to his lofty subject. blasted by excess of light: a graceful allusion to Milton's blindness. Two coursers of etherial race: In praise of Dryden's mastery of the heroic couplet (see page 372), which in his hands acquired both dignity and rapidity. St. 9, Thoughts that breathe: often quoted. Theban Eagle: Pindar. vulgar: common.

178. With the typical merits and defects already noted on page 380. 'It is difficult,' says Mr. Bronson, 'to escape the impression that we are witnessing a "performance," in which the Passions go through their appointed parts. Hope smiles and waves her golden hair. Melancholy plays upon the horn with pensive prettiness. Revenge beats the drum and strains his eyeballs. We look on unmoved.' Observe that in this ode the strict form of the Pindaric ode (see page 379) is not followed. The poet, like Dryden in 86 and 151, makes his verse conform to the passion presented. St. 6, Revenge impatient rose: observe how the change of spirit is reflected in the verse. doubling drum: compare Dryden (86). St. 9, chaste-eyed Queen: Diana. brown Exercise: observe the significance of the epithet. St. 11, sphere-descended maid: See note on 85, St. 17. Cecilia's mingled world of sound: the organ, which includes a world of different tones. Return in all thy simple state: lamenting England's disregard for music.

179. 'From that wild rhapsody of mingled grandeur, tenderness, and obscurity, that "medley between inspiration and possession," which poor Smart is believed to have written whilst in confinement for madness.' P. Smart, like Blake, was isolated by insanity from the age in which he lived. It is significant that this one poem, omitted from editions of his works published in his life as too insane to print, is the only one of his poems that the modern reader cares to read.

180. Adding a mystical quality to a grace almost Elizabethan.

181. Notice the sudden flash of change in the last two lines. The dreadful light is 'the light of day and experience.' P.

182. Giving, in lighter tone, the substance of the Elegy. St. 1, Rosy-bosomed Hours: goddesses, often attendant upon Venus. Attic warbler: the nightingale. St. 5, solitary: Gray was unmarried.

183. 'People nowadays hold this style and metre light; I wish there were any who could put words together with such exquisite flow and evenness.' Tennyson. A metre so strongly accented has, nevertheless, a perilous inclination toward the 'sing-song.' Compare, in this respect 234, 299.

184. Illustrating not only the qualities we have already seen in Burns, but also the new sense of the brotherhood of all, the unity of all created things that appear at this time. See page 376. sleekit: 'sleek.' bickering brattle: 'flittering flight.' laith: 'loth.' pattle: 'ploughstaff.' whyles: 'at times.' a daimen-icker: 'a corn-ear now and then.' thrave: 'shock.' lave: 'rest.' foggage: 'after-grass.' snell: 'biting.' but hald: 'without dwelling-place.' thole: 'bear.' cranreuch: 'hoar-frost.' thy lane: 'alone.' a-gley: 'off the right line, awry.' P.

185. See note on 171. A pleasant picture of cottage life in a village.

186. Regarded by many as the author's best. It has much in common with Gray's Elegy, though the tone has a better-maintained repose, a more statuesque impersonality, without lack of earnest feeling. It is remarkable as being an unrhymed lyric. To Mr. Swinburne it recalls the paintings of Corot. Compare the songs that enter into the body of Tennyson's Princess ('Tears, idle tears,' etc.), and 264 in this volume.

The form here given follows in most respects, the original edition. Most of the poet's later changes seem to have injured both melody and imagination. brede: embroidery. The profusion of personifications,—'capitalized ghosts' one critic calls them—in the last stanza, is certainly a blemish.

187. See the note on L'Allegro. The poem has a certain resemblance to the ode preceding, as well as to another poem, Evening, by Joseph Wharton (not included in this volume). The love of reflective melancholy—tending toward the extreme of Byronic despair —is one of the marks of Romanticism. The merit of the poem lies in the perfection with which it phrases eternal truths in a form suggestive of emotion. glebe: ground. fretted: ornamented with bands. Hampden: see the history of the reign of Charles I. Cromwell: Cromwell was still regarded rather as a traitor than as a patriot. madding: tumultuous. thorn: hawthorn. frowned not: looked kindly upon.

188. The group of poems following represent Burns as the poet of love. We find little of the Venuses and Cupids of the Elizabethans. What exaggeration there is, is that which is natural to sincere passion. scaith: 'hurt.' tent: 'guard.' steer: 'molest.' P.— stoure: dust-storm. braw: fine to see. drumlie: 'muddy.' birk: 'birch.' P.

192. 'There can hardly exist a poem more truly tragic in the highest sense than this: nor, perhaps, Sappho excepted, has any Poetess equalled it.' P. Lady Lindsay composed the words to an old air. As in 162, the imitation has attained the direct, almost Homeric force of the ballad literature. The peculiar restraint is of the sort that springs from deep feeling not from any artificial law. The form, like that of 162 (see note) is based on a foot of four syllables, usually compressed to a heavy dactyl, with a slight accent on the second syllable. The reader will have little trouble if he gives four strong accents to a line, with lighter, secondary accents where they seem needed.

My fa″ther could'na work″ and' my mo″ther could'na spin″.
I toil″ed night' and day″, but' the brĕad I could'na win″.

greet: 'cry.' daurna: 'dare not.' P.

193. Written to a very 'catchy' Scotch air. See page 412. fou: 'merry with drink.' coost: 'carried.' unco skeigh: 'very proud.' gart: 'forced.' abeigh: 'aside.' Ailsa Craig: 'a rock in the Firth of Clyde.' grat his een bleert: 'cried till his eyes were bleared.' sair: 'sore.' smoor'd: 'smothered.' crouse and canty: 'blithe and gay.' P.

194. The authorship is by no means certain. 'Burns justly named this "one of the most beautiful songs in the Scots or any other language." One stanza, interpolated by Beattie, is here omitted:—it contains two good lines, but is out of harmony with the original poem.' P. Bigonet: 'little cap.' thraw: 'twist.' caller: 'fresh.' gin: 'if.' the lave: 'the rest.' P.

195. 'Burns himself, despite two attempts, failed to improve this little absolute masterpiece of music, tenderness, and simplicity: this "Romance of a life" in eight lines.'—Eerie: 'strictly, scared: uneasy.' P.

196. Airts: 'quarters.' row: 'roll.' shaw: 'small wood in a hollow, spinney.' knowes: 'knolls.' 'The last two stanzas are not by Burns.' P.

197. Burns took the title from an older song. jo: 'sweetheart.' brent: 'smooth.' pow: 'head.' P.

198. Lady Nairn's songs are widely known, but her name is seldom heard. She wrote also Caller Herrin', Charley is my Darling, The Hundred Pipers, and Will ye na come back again! leal: 'faithful.' fain: 'happy.' P.

199. Known chiefly by its concluding lines. It was composed soon after the death of one of Gray's best-loved school-mates. A light gracefulness mingles with its melancholy. It abounds, however, in unreal personifications. her Henry's: Henry VI. founded Eton. Windsor's heights: just across the Thames. gales: breezes.

200. 'Written in 1773, towards the beginning of Cowper's second attack of melancholy madness—a time when he altogether gave up prayer, saying, "For him to implore mercy would only anger God the more." ' P.—It refers to one of the poet's favourite haunts.

201. Much resembling his odes, really an ode in character.—Daughter of Jove: Gray quotes in his note from the Agamemnon of Æschylus:

> 'Zeus, who prepared for men
> The path of wisdom, binding fast
> Learning to suffering.'

purple tyrants: clad in royal purple. thy philosophic train: such a train of attributes and accompaniments as are summoned in L'Allegro and Il Penseroso.

202. See note on the form of 183. Cowper, in his solitude of religious terror, is as isolated as Selkirk.

203. 'The Editor would venture to class in the very first rank this Sonnet, which, with 204, records Cowper's gratitude to the Lady whose affectionate care for many years gave what sweetness he could enjoy to a life radically wretched. Petrarch's sonnets have a more ethereal grace and a more perfect finish; Shakspere's more passion; Milton's stand supreme in stateliness; Wordsworth's in depth and delicacy. But Cowper's unites with an exquisiteness in the turn of thought which the ancients would have called Irony, an intensity of pathetic tenderness peculiar to his loving and ingenuous nature.—There is much mannerism, much that is unimportant or of now exhausted interest in his poems: but where he is great, it is with that elementary greatness which rests on the most universal human feelings. Cowper is our highest master in simple pathos.' P. feigned: referring to conventional invocations of the Muses.

204. Less elevated in tone, but with a more vivid impression of facts. It brings out the poetry of plain things.

205. 'Cowper's last original poem, founded upon a story told in Anson's Voyages. It was written March, 1799; he died in next year's April.' P. A pathetic glimpse into Cowper's terror of incurring God's hatred. Yet the scene, in itself, is one vividly, even dramatically presented.

206. See note on form of 183. Not by William Collins, but by John, of whom little is known. Everlasting: used with side-allusion to a cloth so named.

207. From the Ode to Life.

BOOK IV

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

'It proves sufficiently the lavish wealth of our own age in Poetry, that the pieces which, without conscious departure from the Standard of Excellence, render this Book by far the longest, were with very few exceptions composed during the first thirty years of the Nineteenth Century. Exhaustive reasons can hardly be given for the strangely sudden appearance of individual genius: that, however, which assigns the splendid national achievements of our recent poetry to an impulse from the France of the first Republic and Empire is inadequate. The first French Revolution was rather one result,—the most conspicuous, indeed, yet itself in great measure essentially retrogressive,—of that wider and more potent spirit which through enquiry and attempt, through strength and weakness, sweeps mankind round the circles (not, as some too confidently argue, of Advance, but) of gradual Transformation: and it is to this that we must trace the literature of Modern Europe. But, without attempting discussion on the motive causes of Scott, Wordsworth, Shelley, and others, we may observe that these Poets carried to further perfection the later tendencies of the century preceding, in simplicity of narrative, reverence for human Passion and Character in every sphere, and love of Nature for herself:—that, whilst maintaining on the whole the advances in art made since the Restoration, they renewed the half-forgotten melody and depth of tone which marked the best Elizabethan writers:—that, lastly, to what was thus inherited they added a richness in language and a variety in metre, a force and fire in narrative, a tenderness and bloom in feeling, an insight into the finer passages of the Soul and the inner meanings of the landscape, a larger sense of Humanity,—hitherto scarcely attained, and perhaps unattainable even by predecessors of not inferior individual genius. In a word, the Nation which, after the Greeks in their glory, may fairly claim that during six centuries it has proved itself the most richly gifted of all nations for Poetry, expressed in these men the highest strength and prodigality of its nature. They interpreted the age to itself—hence the many phases of thought and style they present:—to sympathise with each, fervently and impartially, without fear and without fancifulness, is no doubtful step in the higher education of the soul. For purity in taste is absolutely proportionate to strength—and when once the mind has raised itself to grasp and to delight in excellence, those who love most will be found to love most wisely. But the gallery which this Book offers to the reader will aid him more than any preface. It is a royal Palace of Poetry which he is invited to enter:

Adparet domus intus, et atria longa patescunt—

though it is, indeed, to the sympathetic eye only that its treasures will be visible.' P.

As the chief characteristics of this period have already been made clear (see pages 373 to 374), it will be sufficient in this Book to make clear how different phases of Romanticism are illustrated in the different poets whose work is represented. We saw that the common factor, in all the very varied manifestations of Romanticism, was its disposition to seek effectiveness and truth to feeling, without regard to methods prescribed by criticism. And we have seen that as a result of this general principle, poetry acquired a greater intensity of feeling, dealt with subjects which, whether familiar or unusual, tended to arouse earnest emotion, that it 'took life seriously' and insisted upon finding and expressing some meaning in it, that it employed such words and metres as produced the effect desired and that it avoided formal or artificial adornment.

Wordsworth, as a typical representative of this period, has already been discussed. There remain, however, certain individual peculiarities of his work. His poetry as a whole divides itself into several distinct groups. In one we might place his longer poems in blank verse, here not represented: in another his longer narrative verse in more lyric form, here represented by Simon Lee and Ruth; in a third, the sonnets, which make up a large part of his work in this Book; in the fourth the minor lyrics,—partly narrative, descriptive, philosophical and personal, and in a fifth group the formal odes, represented here by the Ode to Duty and the Ode on the Intimations of Immortality. The total bulk of Wordsworth's verse is enormous. In it there is much that is dull and prosaic,—a fault illustrated by some passages in Simon Lee. The best, however, stands at the very summit of English poetry. In such a collection as this we have, as a rule, the very best of that best, the chosen sheaf of his poetic harvest.

Wordsworth, as contrasted with the other poets of the Book in which he is here placed, is of a temperament that we might classify as more philosophic. Not only does he seek a significance in life, but the significance is more important than the delight. His feelings are profound, but not intense with the peculiar excitement, amounting to ecstacy, that characterizes Keats or Shelley. He is, even in youth, the poet of reflective maturity. Lover of liberty as he is, the struggles of nations seem to appeal to him less vividly than to the younger group that follows. He approaches rather the dignity of Milton than the fervor of Shakspere or Marlowe.

His theory of 'poetic diction' (see page 375) when carried to the extreme, injured his poetry. He did not as a rule, however, so carry it out. His use of simple words and revival of words of our earlier tongue, when governed by taste, gave his work a homelike directness and simple reality that, however easy to parody, is hard to imitate.

His metrical forms are seldom rapid in movement. The movement of his verse is rather that of the river than the headlong cataract. Of the softer and sweeter melodies of the language, he is a master. His sonnets, as a rule, follow the Italian model rather than Shakspere's. (See page 382.)

Shelley, Keats, and Byron are generally grouped together not only because of their dates, but because of qualities that they have in common. All were stirred by the revival of Romanticism that followed its temporary decline after the French Revolution. All were poets of youth and intensity of feeling, not one living to the age of thirty. Each wrote in a manner new to English literature. If, however, we would go further, it is less easy to find facts true of all three. Some points unite Keats and Shelley, others Byron and Shelley, a few Byron and Keats. One may say in general, that Keats and Shelley are poets of nature and passion; Shelley and Byron, poets of freedom and equality. All are full of the delights of the visible world,—Byron the least.

Shelley comes the nearest to Wordsworth's serious view of life. Whatever his errors in conduct, he had earnest if immature convictions. Too much is made of his atheism. He is nowhere the materialist. He denied God under one name only to affirm him under another. His work is full of the sense of a Spirit, a Power, an all-pervading Soul. He differs from Wordsworth in feeling a communion with this spirit rather in moments of unspeakable ecstatic delight than in moods of calmly deep contemplation. With Keats we approach more nearly the mood of the Elizabethans or the Greeks. He has little of the moral element of the Romanticism. He belongs to the new movement because of his directness, his naturalness, his simplicity of form, his return to the spirit rather than the forms of ancient literature. With him the sense of the divine in the world took the form of a revived belief in the old deities of Greece, not as a pretty fiction, but because they embodied figuratively what he himself felt in the presence of nature.

The elements that delight Keats and Shelley are very different. To Shelley the world is such as would delight a disembodied spirit with senses of etherial fineness,—a world of rainbow color, crystalline brilliance, music too sweetly fine for grosser senses. His favourite landscapes are of snowy peaks, flying cloud-masses, whirling planets, wide views of sea white with storm or flecked with purple shadows,—a world radiantly bewildering. His love is not the love of Burns,—it is for no real woman, but for some ideal of his visions, identified for the moment with some being beside him here on earth. In Keats, on the contrary, while the joy in beauty is no less intense, no less ideal, it is more directly physical in its origin. He delights in luscious tastes, rich scent, the soft touch of the breeze. His life is in and of the body. His feeling toward nature is not like Wordsworth's, an awed sense of the nearness of God, nor like Shelley's, an ecstatic delight that lifts him to God, it is rather the worship of the mortal lover who cannot tell whether he loves his lady's beauty or her soul,—feeling that the two are blended in inseparable harmony.

Byron, with all his praise of nature, is less deeply affected by the external world, except as it appeals to him as reflecting human passion. In human emotion, particularly in its less restrained moods, we find his one inspiration. The divine idea is expressed for him, not in the whole, but in the dignity of the thought of self. Cain, Lara, Manfred, or Byron, as he saw himself,—each stands for the right of a man to do what he wills to do, right or wrong, even in defiance of Heaven. On his worse side he is the poet of rebellion, on his better, the poet of freedom. He is the great Anarchist of letters. Such a philosophy, unmodified, would destroy all unity, all concord in the universe. Where Wordsworth saw one will to which all must submit, Byron saw only his right to refuse any and all submission. He represents the extreme of Individualism. His poems excel, therefore, in the presentation of just this idea, in its varied manifestations,—the sufferings of injured pride, slighted dignity, wronged love, oppressed freedom. And, so long as oppression and injustice prevail, so long as a spirit of rebellion against real grievances is called for, his poems will satisfy a need.

In respect to freedom, the position of Shelley is higher than that of Byron. While the poems here quoted show little of it, we should remember that his enthusiasm was less for the rights of self than for the good of all. His ideal was not Milton's Satan, defying God because of injured pride, but Prometheus, resisting an unjust God for the good of mankind.

In detail of style, all three poets have the impatience of formal restraint, the desire to subordinate means to end, typical of Romanticism. That of Byron has the least beauty in itself; there is a lack of the finer touch, the subtler suggestion, of the other two. Of these, the verse of Shelley's is the swifter and lighter in movement, excelling, in this, any verse since Marlowe's. The music of Keats is richer, approaching, in passages, the fulness of volume of Shakspere or Milton. In each, it should be observed, this character of the verse accords with the difference of personality.

Coleridge, should, in time, be placed with Wordsworth. He is, however, slightly represented in this volume. A profounder philosopher than Wordsworth, he kept his philosophy apart from his poetry. His excellence is less in his explanation of the beauty of the world than in his sense of the wonder of it. In this he comes nearer to the spirit of Keats and Shelley. We read him for the wonderful imagination that made the Ancient Mariner, Kubla Khan, and Christabel,—for his wonderful gift of 'dreaming true.' His poetic gift lay singularly outside of his personal control: his poems 'came to him,' and came all too seldom. What identifies him with the Romantic movement is his delight in subjects of awe and terror, his lack of restraint, his metrical freedom, his avoidance of anything approaching conventional devices. His best work is slight in amount, yet, had he written nothing but Kubla Khan, he would have been one of England's greatest poets.

Of other writers of Book Fourth, the most important are Scott, Moore, and Campbell. Scott's imagination lacked fineness, but had a vigor that, combined with energy of expression and magnetic personality, made him, like Byron, a writer of universal popularity. His imitation of the old ballads, his love of stories of chivalry, his delight in the extraordinary, both in adventure and in the supernatural, his appreciation of the wilder aspects of nature, are all typical of Romanticism. So is his comparative simplicity—from which he occasionally relapses—and the freedom of his metrical form. Like Byron, he felt the beauty of nature, not so much as symbolical of any deeper meaning, as being in harmony or sometimes in effective contrast with human emotion. His first concern was with human character and human feelings.

Moore, while hardly a line of his verse has the moving power of the work of greater poets, has a singing quality, a lyric grace, delicately half-serious, perhaps peculiarly Irish—that makes his songs—if less deeply felt—yet almost as widely sung as those of Burns.

Campbell, whenever able to free himself from the artifices of the period preceding, has an energy that entitles him to a creditable place. He excels in metrical effect, both the Battle of the Baltic and Hohenlinden being as remarkable in rhythm as they are unsatisfying in rhyme.

Of other writers, Blake has been discussed in the Introductory Note to Book Third (page 412). Hood has, in minor degree, the excellences of Scott and Moore. It should be noted, in closing, that singularly few authors are represented in a period abounding in lyric verse. Had the collection been made to include authors still living in the third quarter of the Nineteenth Century, as much again could have been added. Of work contemporary with that included, one cannot but regret the absence of Blake's Tiger and Lamb and certain lyrics of Beddoes and Peacock.

208. 'This beautiful lyric, printed in 1783, seems to anticipate in its imaginative music that return to our great early age of song, which in Blake's own lifetime was to prove,—how gloriously! that the English Muses had resumed their "ancient melody."—Keats, Shelley, Byron,—he overlived them all.' P.—Perhaps Palgrave has intended to imply, by including Blake's work in both Books, that he belongs to both periods. This poem utters discouragement in the darkness that preceded the new dawn of poetry. Observe that the Muses are invoked with real feeling, not as a 'poetic convention.'

209. (See page 425.) Poets, Keats means, have a double immortality,—in heaven where they enjoy all raptures, and on earth where they teach men insight and wisdom. Note the physical nature of the images, 'soft ease,' etc.

210. The concluding lines suggest the sudden amazement. 'stout Cortez: History would here suggest Balbóa: (A. T.). To find in Chapman's Homer the "pure serene" of the original, the reader must bring with him the imagination of the youthful poet;—he must be "a Greek himself," as Shelley finely said of Keats.' P.

211. Ruins, moonlight, knights and armor, spirits, love,—all the appurtenances of Romantic poetry appear in this poem. It has not, for all its simplicity of form, the reality of Coleridge's best work. Observe how few descriptive words are used. The metre approaches the ballad form.

212. 'The most tender and true of Byron's short poems.'— P. For the rhythm, see note on 183.

213. From Rokeby. The speaker is an outlaw,—like Locksley in Ivanhoe. 'This poem exemplifies the peculiar skill with which Scott employs proper names:—a rarely misleading sign of true poetical genius.' P.

214. Her bright chain: the line of her reflection, lying like a chain over the sea whose tides she controls.

215. (See page 425.) The first stanza is a perfect expression of mystical passion. The words were written to an (East) Indian air. The rhyme-system is complex, and is not consistently carried out. champak: a tree somewhat like the magnolia.

216. To be compared with the poem following, each being typical of its author. Byron's is the more appreciative of beauty, Wordsworth's of character. Byron, one might say, does not go beyond Wordsworth's first stanza.

218. Hartley Coleridge was the son of the greater poet.

219. Almost in the spirit of Heine.

220 to 223. A group showing Wordsworth's simplicity (see pages 375 and 425) in its best sense. The words, like the few words of a friend, imply more than they utter. Lines 7 and 8, for example, are meaningless unless imagination responds. There is much discussion as to whether these poems are founded upon reality. Such discussion is useless. The thing to see is that they are reality. Each, one should observe, ends with the same fact,—her death. Each, one might say, is a different approach to that fact, the one fact to which all roads of thought obstinately lead. One should compare Landor's Rose Aylmer (not in this volume).

221. wheel: spinning-wheel.

222. Note Wordsworth's theory, somewhat like that of Hawthorne in the Great Stone Face, that one can find in his world God's lessons of grace and nobility. heath: the heather-covered moorland.

223. Not doubting immortality, merely realizing what has befallen. There is a dizzying realization of the vast sweep of the circling earth.

224. By the author of Abide with me. Stanzas 4 and 5 are far above the rest.

225. To the modern reader this may seem a little 'melodramatic' or overdone in the externals of emotion. Lochgyle is a narrow arm of the sea on the West of Scotland.

226. 'Simple as Lucy Gray seems, a mere narrative of what "has been, and may be again," yet every touch in the child's picture is marked by the deepest and purest ideal character.' P. It is told almost in the language of prose, especially stanzas 4–6. All the description is based on actual sight, 'powdery snow that rises up like smoke,' etc. The last stanza adds a touch of the mysterious.

227. The first stanza is from an old border-song. Scott's completion shows a slight difference in tone. mettled: spirited. managed trained.

229. (See page 427.)

230. From Quentin Durward. County: count.

231. (See page 427.) pensile: hanging (rather a showy word).

232. Contrast this with the preceding. Observe the difference in the personifications, which, in the latter poem, are founded on the imaginative picture that the poet actually sees. Note the peculiar 'magic' of Shelly's imagery: 'mantle star-inwrought,' 'opiate wand,' 'murmured like a noontide bee.' Such a poem needs no musical setting. (See page 379.)

233. Introducing a series of poems that deal with wronged or disappointed love.

234. With the Byronic tendency to self-pity. The rhythm is over-violent for the thought. See note on 183.

235. 'In this, and in other instances, the addition (or the change) of a Title has been risked in hope that the aim of the piece following may be grasped more clearly and immediately.' P. petting: becoming peevish; in a pet.

236. From Marmion, canto iii. The words are recalled by Marmion at his death. Eleu loro: probably Gaelic, expressive of grief.

237. Different from most of the work of Keats, yet characteristic. Cf. 211, which it surpasses in fineness. La Belle Dame sans merci: the fair lady without mercy. It was suggested by the title of an old ballad of different substance.

238. From Rokeby. rue: a bitter herb, typical of repentance.

239. Note the little catch in rhythm at the beginning of stanza 2. In line 3 of the same stanza a light syllable is omitted after heart's. To endure what it once possest: supply 'the loss of' (after endure).

240. 'Almost more pathetic than a man has a right to be.' Palgrave, quoting Tennyson. The poem is founded upon a real story. The lover, not expecting to see her at that spot, failed to recognize her, she was so altered by illness. Compare the following poem.

241. Upon the same subject. It seems rather unreal. The rhyme in stanza 3 is bad. See also end of 259.

242. 'This beautiful Sonnet was the last word of a youth, in whom, if the fulfillment may ever safely be prophesied from the promise, England lost one of the most rarely gifted in the long roll of her poets. Shakspere and Milton, had their lives been closed at twenty-five, would (so far as we know) have left poems of less excellence and hope.' P.—Both this and the following follow the Shaksperean model. They are Shaksperean too in more than form. There is the same joy in life and shrinking from its obliteration in death.

244. Written in memory of his daughter.

245. 'It is impossible not to regret that Moore has written so little in this sweet and genuinely national style.' P.

246. 'A masterly example of Byron's command of strong thought and close reasoning in verse:—as the next is equally characteristic of Shelley's wayward intensity.' P. Compare with 220 and 223, observing the different personality of the authors.

248. Based on a Gaelic pibroch (bag-pipe summons). gentles: men of rank. targes: shields.

249. sheet: the rope that controls the sail. flowing: running.

250. Composed to an old air. A poem with intense fervor and compelling rhythm. meteor flag: like a meteor, both in appearance (white with red cross) and as an omen of disaster to other nations.

251. In the spirit of the foregoing. The battle was won by Nelson, off Copenhagen, 1801. It prevented the union of England's enemies. (See Southey's Life of Nelson.) to anticipate the scene: in anticipation of it. Elsinore: a neighbouring sea-port, the scene of Hamlet. Riou: a captain who died fighting bravely.

252. Conveying a moral truth with lyric feeling. Its central thought lies in the lines

> 'Give unto me, made lowly wise,
> The spirit of self-sacrifice.'

253. 'Bonnivard, a Genevese was imprisoned by the Duke of Savoy in Chillon on the lake of Geneva for his courageous defence of his country against the tyranny with which Piedmont threatened it during the first half of the Seventeenth Century.—This noble Sonnet is worthy to stand near Milton's on the Vaudois massacre.' P. See Byron's Prisoner of Chillon.

254-5. 'Switzerland was usurped by the French under Napoleon in 1800: Venice in 1797 (255).' P.

255. Wordsworth's plea is more philosophic, more abstract, than Bryon's (see note on preceding). In fee: in possession. Her birth: her ancestry.

256. The preaching of many a philosopher and reformer, as much needed to-day as in 1802. Fearful: humble; in awe of powers over us.

259. 'This battle was fought Dec. 2, 1800, between the Austrians under Archduke John and the French under Moreau, in a forest near Munich. Hohen Linden means High Limetrees.' P. The last line of each stanza with its 'weak' rhyme, gives an effect peculiarly sullen. The closing rhyme is abominable. Frank: French. Hun: Austrians.

260. The battle of Blenheim was won by the English in 1704. Some historians think that it did much to strengthen England's position. Southey, a Tory, had little sympathy for a victory won under Whig government.

261. Pro Patria mori: to die for one's fatherland, in reference to the death of Robert Emmett. Thee: Ireland.

262. 'After the capture of Madrid by Napoleon, Sir J. Moore was killed whilst covering the embarkation of his troops.' P. A poem singularly direct and unadorned. Compare 165.

263. The scene of the actual event was not in Cardigan, but in the Quantocks, at Alfoxden, Wordsworth's temporary home. In this, especially in stanza 8, one sees some of the faults of Wordsworth. (See page 425.) huntsman: not a hunter, but a servant connected with the hunt.

264. In a strange metre, somewhat like that of Auld Robin Gray (192) or of 162. There are four accents to each line. One hardly notices the absence of rhyme.

> 'I″ háve had play″mat'es, I″ have had' compan″ions
> All″, all' are gone″, the old″ fami'liar fa″ces.'

267. The best of Wordsworth's three poems upon the same subject. prodigal . . . miser: Youth and Age.

270. A wonderfully brilliant sea-picture, with the contrasted sadness of heart that makes even the light as darkness.

271. A poem rather lacking in lyric feeling.

272. 'The Mermaid was the club-house of Shakspere, Ben Jonson, and other choice spirits of that age.' P.—Evidence that Keats had some sense of humor. bowse: drink copiously. in the Zodiac: now become one of the constellations.

273. 'Maisie,—Scott has given us nothing more complete and lovely than this little song, which unites simplicity and dramatic power to a wild-wood music of the rarest quality. No moral is drawn, far less any conscious analysis of feeling attempted:—the pathetic meaning is left to be suggested by the mere presentment of the situation. A narrow criticism has often named this, which may be called the Homeric manner, superficial, from its apparent simple facility; but first rate excellence in it is in truth one of the least common triumphs of Poetry.—This style should be compared with what is not less perfect in its way, the searching out of inner feeling, the expression of hidden meanings, the revelation of the heart of Nature and of the Soul within the Soul,—the analytical method, in short,—most completely represented by Wordsworth and by Shelley.' P.—Lucy Gray and some of Wordsworth's other poems are, however, no less 'Homeric.'

274. See 268.

275. Unteach: teach us not to.

276. With the sober, one might almost say the Quaker tone of so much of Lamb's work.

277. 'Wolfe resembled Keats, not only in his early death by consumption and the fluent freshness of his poetical style, but in beauty of character:—brave, tender, energetic, unselfish, modest. Is it fanciful to find some reflex of these qualities in the Burial and Mary?' P.

278. coronach: dirge, death-song. correi: 'covert on a hillside.' cumber: 'trouble.' P.

279. Cf. Dante G. Rossetti's My Sister's Sleep.

280. 'This book has not a few poems of greater power and more perfect execution than Agnes and the extract which we have ventured to make from the deep-hearted author's Sad Thoughts (No. 224). But none are more emphatically marked by the note of exquisiteness.' P.—(Some may not agree with this appreciation.)

281. Of the type of Lord Ullin's daughter, but with the setting of days of chivalry. It imitates the form of the ballad. The first stanza is the minstrel's introduction; Rosabelle herself speaks in the next five stanzas. The last two stanzas form a sort of conclusion. Compare them with the conclusion of the ballad of Sir Patrick Spens. frith: a narrow sea-inlet. inch: 'island.' P. at the ring they ride: to carry it off on the lance-point. pinnet: pinacle.

283. 'From Poetry for Children (1809), by Charles and Mary Lamb. This tender and original little piece seems clearly to reveal the work of that noble-minded and afflicted sister, who was at once the happiness, the misery, and the life-long blessing of her equally noble-minded brother.' P.

284. The son has left his mother and she longs to know what has befallen him. The first lines of stanza 10 are among the best.

286. To be compared with the following. In Wordsworth we have the real bird, the living, actual creature: in Shelley the rapturous fancies awakened by its song. The closing lines of 286, in detached couplet, sum up the poem.

287. One of the most lyric of all long lyric poems. The poet endeavours to make real to us his particular rapture by accumulating a series of pictures, all with this same kind of rapturous delight as a common factor. Note the reiterated figures of white intense light and of crystal-pure sound (stanzas 5, 7, 10, 11). silver sphere: the star of heaven in the broad daylight. Stanzas 16 to 18 introduce a minor strain, the limitation of human joy.

288. In Wordsworth's lighter style, picturing rather than interpreting. paramours: lovers.

289. 'This poem has an exultation and a glory, joined with an exquisiteness of expression, which place it in the highest rank among the many masterpieces of its illustrious Author.' P. Some may regard this praise as extreme.

290. As in the case of Shelley (287), we see, not the bird, but the mood aroused by its song. Observe the physical reality of all the images, the intense appeal to the senses of the body. (See page 426.) There is a feeling of sultry luxuriance. Lethe-ward: toward Lethe, river of forgetfulness. Provençal song: that of southern France, dealing with love and pleasure. Hippocrene: the fount of the Muses, here pouring wine. pards: leopards. Darkling: in darkness. clown: peasant. Ruth: see Book of Ruth, ii.

291. Revealing the real stateliness of a scene generally regarded as commonplace. The last two lines soar suddenly to an unexpected height. Towers, temples: Westminster Abbey and Hall stand close by.

292. debonair: graceful.

293. The incident is probably imaginary; the situation, however, is one that must repeatedly have occurred in history. (This sonnet does not, in rhyme-system, conform to any regular type.) the hand: the sculptor's. the heart: the king's.

295. On a subject related to that of 294. Beeches in England attain great size and beauty.

296. There is no expression of romantic love in this or in most of Wordsworth's poems. Compare The Reaper following. These poems are based upon incidents in Wordsworth's tour of the Scottish Highlands.

297. brook'd: borne.

298. Full of 'magical' lines.

299. The metre brings up the problem suggested by 183. Wood Street, like the other places named, is in the heart of London.

300. Ariel (see Shakspere's Tempest) was to attend upon Miranda, not only in her happiness with Ferdinand but through all her later reincarnations (returns to this world). Here he is imprisoned in a guitar, its spirit of music, at her service. The treatment is as fairylike as the notion is fantastic. interlunar swoon: 'interval of the moon's invisibility.' P.

301. Observe that Wordsworth creates a poem out of one intense impression which another would have soon forgotten.

302. A poem that makes no pretension to very deep feeling, the pleasant 'chat' of a poet.

303. With characteristic richness and an almost cloying accumulation of physical impressions.

304. This shows Campbell labouring under Eighteenth Century influences. His allusions, however, are 'tinged with Romantic extravagance. 'Odin' and 'loud Lofoden' do much to neutralize 'young Spring,' 'rosy Summer,' and 'Frenzy with her blood-shot eye.' Calpe: 'Gibraltar.' Lofoden: 'the Maelstrom whirlpool off the N. W. coast of Norway.' P.

305. Yarrow is a centre of Border song. See any collection of Scotch ballads. 'This lovely poem refers here and there to a ballad by Hamilton on the subject better treated in 163 and 164.' P. marrow: companion (here the poet's sister).

306. Written eleven years later.

307. The landscape is seen in the peculiarly brilliant light that marks Shelley's pictures.

308. The beginning of stanza 5 is especially fine.

309. Compare with 222.

310. The first line far excels the rest of the poem, though the last lines of stanza 2 are striking.

311. Datur Hora Quieti: the hour is given to quiet.

313. Another illustration of the poet's power to find poetry in a common experience.

314. pallet: rough couch.

315. See note on 307. Arcturi: 'seemingly used for northern stars. And wild roses, &c. Our language has perhaps no line modulated with more subtle sweetness.' P.

316. 'Coleridge describes this poem as the fragment of a dream-vision,—perhaps, an opium-dream?—which composed itself in his mind when fallen asleep after reading a few lines about "the Khan Kubla" in Purchas' Pilgrimage.' P. The poem breaks off abruptly, interrupted by a 'person on business.' Its form follows, better perhaps than the form of any other poem, each change of the writer's mood. It must be read aloud to be appreciated.

317. Observe how the abstract thought is transmuted into lyric poetry by the earnestness with which the poet realizes its truth.

318. Some compare this to L'Allegro and Il Penseroso. The resemblance is slight. There is a luxuriance that one never finds in Milton. The metre, while similar in form, is treated very differently. ingle: fire-place. Ceres' daughter: 'Proserpine.' God of Torment: 'Pluto.'

319. In how different a spirit Keats or Shelley would have described the same scene.

320. Not purely lyric. Its greatest value lies in its wonderful pictures of tropic nature. The last stanzas have Wordsworth's peculiarly vivid appreciation of the patience of the poor. Compare A Lesson (267). (See also Millet's drawings of peasant life.) Georgia: in America. savannahs: wide plains. the engines of her pain: the elements that had unsettled her lover's nature. Quantock: the Quantock hills are in W. Somerset, near Minehead. (See note on 263.)

321. 'The leading idea of this beautiful description of a day's landscape in Italy appears to be—On the voyage of life are many moments of pleasure, given by the sight of Nature, who has power to heal even the worldliness and the uncharity of man.' P.—The idea, like many of Shelley's, is so etherial that it is hard to keep it clearly in mind, especially with the throng of distracting images that his verse presents. Two passages of some length are omitted, 182 lines in all. (See page v*.) The pictures are those of the world as seen from a high mountain summit, spread out in broad sunshine and shadow. The Euganian hills: hills in Italy, between Padua and Verona. Amphitrite: 'daughter to Ocean.' P. islanded: like scattered islands. sun-girt: as seen with sun-brightened mists about it. slave of slaves: Napoleon. depopulated: adj. masque: dance. Be it love, light, harmony: approaching Wordsworth's feeling of a deity that 'interpenetrates' all.

322. A headlong lyric, with the rush of the wind itself. In unity and firm grasp of the central emotion it is far superior to the preceding. The rhyme-system is approximately that of the Italian terza rima, save for the division into stanzas, each with a concluding couplet. The refrain gives the effect of a litany. Maenad: 'a frenzied Nymph, attendant on Dionysos' P. 'Plants under water sympathize with the seasons of the land.' P.

323. 'Written soon after the death, by shipwreck, of Wordsworth's brother John. This poem may be profitably compared with Shelley's following it. Each is the most complete expression of the innermost spirit of his art given by these great Poets:—of that Idea which, as in the case of the true Painter, (to quote the words of Reynolds,) "subsists only in the mind: The sight never beheld it, nor has the hand expressed it: it is an idea residing in the breast of the artist, which he is always labouring to impart, and which he dies at last without imparting." ' P. The castle is a ruined keep on the coast of Lancashire. The third line of stanza 4 is famous.

324. From Prometheus Unbound, i, 737. Line 10 is remarkable.

325. Ossian: a Gaelic poet, alleged to have been the author of certain poems, which some declare that Macpherson, their 'collector,' had written himself.

326. A keen presentation of the despiritualizing nature of artificial life,—to counteract which is the function of true poetry. Compare the thought as developed in 338.

327. The reader should see a good picture of the interior of the building described. tax: blame. the Royal Saint: 'Henry VI.' P.

328. 'Every one knows the general story of the Italian Renaissance, of the Revival of Letters.—From Petrarch's day to our own that ancient world has renewed its youth: Poets and artists, students and thinkers, have yielded themselves wholly to its fascination, and deeply penetrated its spirit. Yet perhaps no one more truly has vivified, whilst idealising, the picture of Greek country life in the fancied Golden Age, than Keats in these lovely (if somewhat unequally executed) stanzas:—his quick imagination, by a kind of "natural magic," more than supplying the scholarship which his youth had no opportunity of gaining.' P.—Observe the almost Elizabethan insistence upon the fact that human life and its pleasure must pass. (See Introduction, pages 369 and 370.) The rhyme-system is varied in stanzas 2 and 5. Sylvan historian: its rustic decorations tell us of past days. Tempe: in Thessaly. Arcady: associated with pastoral poetry. sensual: of the bodily senses. P. this folk: 'its has been here plausibly, but, perhaps unnecessarily conjectured.' P. brede: adornment, embroidery. silent: cold,—the fact that the scene is not living, but merely carved, is constantly dwelt upon. The implied contrast is really the subject of the poem. Beauty is truth: an idea ever-present in the poetry of Keats.

329. Coleridge's life, for all its successes, was a life of failure. He felt deeply the fact that the promise of his early genius had never been fulfilled. those trim skiffs: steamers. silvery slips: strips. altered size: his stoutness.

330. With the simplicity of Lucy Gray (226). steaming rills: under the hot sun (cf. 285). wilding: wild apple.

331. With some of the faults of Simon Lee (263).

333. Recalling the Seven Ages of Man, As You Like It, ii., vii. It has the tone of many of the sonnets of Shakspere. (See note on 242.)

335. Possibly the word autumn is omitted in line 8. Threnos: a lament, usually for the dead, here for the lost glory of life. Cf. the idea of 338.

337. Line 7 is well known. Compare the poem that follows, which develops a related idea. Natural piety: the piety that finds God's presence in nature.

338. This ode should be compared carefully with the more artificial odes of the same type previously studied. (See Introduction, page 379.) In its form it follows through deliberate choice, not ignorance, the free form used by the first English imitators of Pindar. The form, however, has less of the mechanical (see page 372). The poet does not, like Cowley or Dryden, declaim, exemplifying the devices of the elocutionist; he speaks his meaning in verse that seems to follow the natural cadences of the voice.

To outline the poem briefly: the poet finds no longer in the world the delight it once gave, yet children in their innocent mirth seem still to enjoy this. He concludes that the sense of glory, the heavenly rapture that we bring with us at birth from some other existence (compare Vaughan's poem, 98) is gradually covered or effaced by the acquiring of worldly customs. Yet it is not quite effaced: occasional 'questionings' recall it and in nature, hints of the world's deeper meaning appeal to answering instincts within us.

Wordsworth seems hardly, himself, to have held to this theory as a literal belief. 'I took hold,' he says, 'of the notion of pre-existence as having sufficient foundation in humanity for authorizing me to make for my purpose the best use of it I could as a poet.' The poem, however, does embody the deeper doctrine (already commented on in the Introduction, page 374) that underlies all his poetry:—We are too likely to allow the world of externals, custom, convention,—the World of Sonnet 326,—the kind of World that one conjoins with the Flesh and the Devil,—the world as man has made it,—not as God meant it—we are too likely to allow this world to hide from us the real spirituality, the true expression of God's Will as embodied in nature and in our own deeper consciousness. The poem ends in a peculiar sobriety of joy,—not the lost rapture, but an abiding sense of a divine meaning that pervades the beauty about us. tabor: a small drum. fields of sleep: intended to bring up images of drowsy peace. (Is there possible reference to fields of poppies?) Heaven lies about us: Contrast the Vision of Sir Launfal, where Lowell, while really agreeing, apparently denies this idea. Behold the child: It is significant to compare, as Prof. Hales does, Pope's Essay on Man, ii., 275–282. stanza 8, exaggerated? stanza 9, one of the best in this ode.

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

PAGE

A Chieftain to the Highlands bound 222
A child's a plaything for an hour 283
A flock of sheep that leisurely pass by 321
A slumber did my spirit seal 221
A sweet disorder in the dress 97
A weary lot is thine, fair maid 236
A wet sheet and a flowing sea 246
Absence, hear thou this protestation 8
Ah, Chloris! could I now but sit 88
Ah, County Guy, the hour is nigh 228
All in the Downs the fleet was moor'd 156
All thoughts, all passions, all delights 209
And are ye sure the news is true 189
And is this—Yarrow?—This the Stream 312
And thou art dead, as young and fair 242
And wilt thou leave me thus 26
Ariel to Miranda:—Take 303
Art thou pale for weariness 321
Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers 50
As it fell upon a day 26
As I was walking all alane 110
As slow our ship her foamy track 263
At the corner of Wood Street, when daylight appears . . 302
At the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping, I fly . . 241
Avenge, O Lord! Thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones . . 65
Awake, Æolian lyre, awake 164
Awake, awake, my Lyre 104

Bards of Passion and of Mirth 207
Beauty sat bathing by a spring 13
Behold her, single in the field 301
Being your slave, what should I do but tend 9
Beneath these fruit-tree boughs that shed 291
Best and brightest, come away 315

PAGE

Bid me to live, and I will live 100
Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy 129
Blow, blow, thou winter wind 33
Bright star! would I were steadfast as thou art 239

Call for the robin-redbreast and the wren 40
Calm was the day, and through the trembling air 45
Captain, or Colonel, or Knight in Arms 77
Care-charmer Sleep, son of the Sable Night 27
Come away, come away, Death 38
Come, cheerful day, part of my life to me 50
Come, little babe, come silly soul 34
Come live with me and be my Love 4
Come, Sleep: O Sleep! the certain knot of peace 24
Come unto these yellow sands 2
Crabbed Age and Youth 6
Cupid and my Campaspé play'd 43
Cyriack, whose grandsire, on the royal bench 82

Daughter of Jove, relentless power 197
Daughter to that good Earl, once President 91
Degenerate Douglas! oh, the unworthy lord 297
Doth then the world go thus, doth all thus move 53
Down in yon garden sweet and gay 153
Drink to me only with thine eyes 94
Duncan Gray cam here to woo 188

Earl March look'd on his dying child 239
Earth has not anything to show more fair 296
E'en like two little bank-dividing brooks 99
Eternal Spirit of the chainless Mind 252
Ethereal minstrel! pilgrim of the sky 287
Ever let the Fancy roam 326

Fain would I change that note 5
Fair Daffodils, we weep to see 114
Fair pledges of a fruitful tree 114
Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing 25
Fear no more the heat o' the sun 39
Fine knacks for ladies cheap, choice, brave and new . . . 22
Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow 29
For ever, Fortune, wilt thou prove 161

PAGE
Forget not yet the tried intent 18
Four Seasons fill the measure of the year 357
From Harmony, from heavenly Harmony 63
From Stirling Castle we had seen 310
Full fathom five thy father lies 40

Gather ye rose-buds while ye may 89
Gem of the crimson-colour'd Even 229
Get up, get up, for shame! The blooming morn 95
Go fetch to me a pint o' wine 159
Go, lovely Rose 93

Hail thou most sacred venerable thing 132
Hail to thee, blithe Spirit 288
Happy the man, whose wish and care 141
Happy those early days, when I 80
Happy were he could finish forth his fate 54
He that loves a rosy cheek 92
He is gone on the mountain 278
Hence, all you vain delights 106
Hence, loathéd Melancholy 119
Hence, vain deluding Joys 123
He sang of God, the mighty source 171
High-way, since you my chief Parnassus be 9
How happy is he born and taught 78
How like a winter hath my absence been 10
How sleep the brave who sink to rest 150
How sweet the answer Echo makes 228
How vainly men themselves amaze 116

I am monarch of all I survey 199
I arise from dreams of Thee 215
I cannot change, as others do 89
I dream'd that as I wander'd by the way 323
I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden 218
I have had playmates, I have had companions 263
I have no name 172
I heard a thousand blended notes 329
I meet thy pensive, moonlight face 221
I met a traveller from an antique land 297
I remember, I remember 266
I saw Eternity the other night 133

PAGE
I saw her in childhood 279
I saw my lady weep 19
I saw where in the shroud did lurk 282
I travell'd among unknown men 219
I wander'd lonely as a cloud 305
I was thy neighbour once, thou rugged Pile 344
I wish I were where Helen lies 109
If aught of oaten stop or pastoral song 177
If doughty deeds my lady please 159
If I had thought thou couldst have died 277
If Thou survive my well-contented day 41
If to be absent were to be 103
I'm wearing awa', Jean 193
In a drear-nighted December 233
In the downhill of life, when I find I'm declining 204
In the sweet shire of Cardigan 260
In this still place, remote from men 347
In Xanadu did Kubla Khan 324
It is a beauteous evening, calm and free 319
It is not growing like a tree 79
It was a dismal and a fearful night 111
It was a lover and his lass 7
It was a summer evening 256
I've heard them lilting at our ewe-milking 151

Jack and Joan, they think no ill 118
John Anderson my jo, John 192

Lady, when I behold the roses sprouting 42
Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son 81
Let me not to the marriage of true minds 19
Life! I know not what thou art 205
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore . . . 24
Like to the clear in highest sphere 12
Love in my bosom, like a bee 42
Love in thy youth, fair Maid, be wise 93
Love not me for comely grace 100
Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours 173

Many a green isle needs must be 337
Mary! I want a lyre with other strings 200
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour 254

PAGE

Mine be a cot beside the hill 177
Mortality, behold and fear 75
Most sweet it is with unuplitted eyes 326
Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold 209
Music, when soft voices die 365
My days among the Dead are past 269
My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains 293
My heart leaps up when I behold 359
My Love in her attire doth shew her wit 98
My lute, be as thou wert when thou didst grow 39
My thoughts hold mortal strife 38
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his 20

Never love unless you can 16
Never seek to tell thy love 162
No longer mourn for me when I am dead 41
Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note 259
Not, Celia, that I juster am 101
Now the golden Morn aloft 138
Now the last day of many days 316

O blithe new-comer! I have heard 292
O Brignall banks are wild and fair 213
O Friend! I know not which way I must look 253
O happy shades! to me unblest 196
O if thou knew'st how thou thyself dost harm 18
O leave this barren spot to me 298
O listen, listen, ladies gay 280
O lovers' eyes are sharp to see 238
O Mary, at thy window be 183
O me! what eyes hath love put in my head 30
O Mistress mine, where are you roaming 21
O my Luve's like a red, red rose 185
O never say that I was false of heart 11
O saw ye bonnie Lesley 184
O say what is that thing call'd Light 142
O talk not to me of a name great in story 212
O Thou, by Nature taught 139
O waly waly up the bank 107
O what can ail thee, knight-at-arms 235
O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being . . . 342
O World! O Life! O Time 358

PAGE
Obscurest night involved the sky 202
Of all the girls that are so smart 157
Of a' the airts the wind can blaw 191
Of Nelson and the North 248
Of Neptune's empire let us sing 82
Of this fair volume which we World do name 53
Oft I had heard of Lucy Gray 224
Oft in the stilly night 267
Oh snatch'd away in beauty's bloom 275
On a day, alack the day 17
On a Poet's lips I slept 346
Once did She hold the gorgeous East in fee 253
One more Unfortunate 272
One word is too often profaned 244
On Linden, when the sun was low 255
Our bugles sang truce, for the night-cloud had lower'd . . 322
Over the mountains 86

Pack, clouds, away, and welcome day 44
Phoebus, arise 2
Pibroch of Donuil Dhu 244
Poor Soul, the centre of my sinful earth 51
Proud Maisie is in the wood 271

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair 83

Rough Wind, that moanest loud 357
Ruin seize thee, ruthless King 146

Season of mist and mellow fruitfulness 308
See with what simplicity 87
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day 15
Shall I, wasting in despair 105
She dwelt among the untrodden ways 219
She is not fair to outward view 218
She walks in beauty, like the night 216
She was a Phantom of delight 217
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea 4
Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part 29
Sleep, angry beauty, sleep and fear not me 31
Sleep on, and dream of Heaven awhile 161
Sleep, sleep, beauty bright 172

PAGE
Souls of Poets dead and gone 270
Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year's pleasant king . . . 1
Star that bringest home the bee 320
Stern Daughter of the Voice of God 250
Surprized by joy—impatient as the wind 240
Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes 92
Sweet Highland Girl, a very shower 299
Sweet Love, if thou wilt gain a monarch's glory 14
Sweet stream, that winds through yonder glade 160
Swiftly walk over the western wave 230

Take, O take those lips away 29
Tax not the royal Saint with vain expense 348
Tell me not, Sweet, I am unkind 90
Tell me where is Fancy bred 42
That time of year thou may'st in me behold 23
That which her slender waist confined 98
The curfew tolls the knell of parting day 179
The forward youth that would appear 66
The fountains mingle with the river 227
The glories of our blood and state 76
The last and greatest Herald of Heaven's King 55
The lovely lass o' Inverness 150
The man of life upright 52
The merchant, to secure his treasure 162
The more we live, more brief appear 356
The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth 28
The poplars are fell'd; farewell to the shade 174
There be none of Beauty's daughters 215
There is a flower, the lesser Celandine 266
There is a garden in her face 94
There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away . 264
There's not a nook within this solemn Pass 358
There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream . . . 359
The sea hath many thousand sands 32
The sun is warm, the sky is clear 268
The sun upon the lake is low 320
The twentieth year is well-nigh past 201
The world is too much with us; late and soon 348
They are all gone into the world of light 113
They that have power to hurt, and will do none 25
This is the month, and this the happy morn 56

PAGE
This Life, which seems so fair 51
Though others may her brow adore 20
Thou art not fair, for all thy red and white 33
Thou still unravish'd bride of quietness 349
Three years she grew in sun and shower 220
Thy braes were bonny, Yarrow stream 152
Timely blossom, Infant fair 144
Tired with all these, for restful death I cry 54
Toll for the Brave 154
To me, fair Friend, you never can be old 11
To one who has been long in city pent 296
Turn back, you wanton flyer 16
'Twas at the royal feast for Persia won 133
'Twas on a lofty vase's side 142
Two Voices are there; one is of the Sea 252

Under the greenwood tree 7
Upon my lap my sovereign sits 108

Verse, a breeze 'mid blossoms straying 350
Victorious men of earth, no more 76

Waken, lords and ladies gay 286
Wee, sleekit, cow'rin', tim'rous beastie 175
Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee 37
Weep you no more, sad fountains 14
Were I as base as is the lowly plain 21
We talk'd with open heart, and tongue 354
We walk'd along, while bright and red 352
We watch'd her breathing thro' the night 278
When as in silks my Julia goes 98
When Britain first at Heaven's command 145
When first the fiery-mantled Sun 309
When God at first made Man 79
When he who adores thee has left but the name 258
When icicles hang by the wall 22
When I consider how my light is spent 78
When I have borne in memory what has tamed 254
When I have fears that I may cease to be 240
When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced 3
When I survey the bright 130
When I think on the happy days 191

PAGE
When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes 10
When in the chronicle of wasted time 15
When lovely woman stoops to folly 163
When Love with unconfinéd wings 101
When maidens such as Hester die 276
When Music, heavenly maid, was young 168
When Ruth was left half desolate 330
When the lamp is shatter'd 237
When the sheep are in the fauld, and the kye at hame . . 186
When thou must home to shades of underground 36
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought 23
When we two parted 232
Where art thou, my beloved Son 284
Where shall the lover rest 233
Where the bee sucks, there suck I 1
Where the remote Bermudas ride 128
Whether on Ida's shady brow 207
While that the sun with his beams hot 31
Whoe'er she be 83
Why art thou silent? Is thy love a plant 231
Why so pale and wan, fond lover 103
Why weep ye by the tide, ladie 226
With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies . . . 36
With little here to do or see 306
With sweetest milk and sugar first 115

Ye banks and braes and streams around 185
Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon 163
Ye distant spires, ye antique towers 193
Ye Mariners of England 246
Yes, there is holy pleasure in thine eye 299
Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more 70
You meaner beauties of the night 91

INDEX OF WRITERS WITH DATES OF BIRTH AND DEATH

NUMBER

ALEXANDER, William (1580–1640).
To Aurora 29

BARBAULD, Anna Lætitia (1743–1825).
To Life 207
BARNEFIELD, Richard (16th century).
The Nightingale 45
BEAUMONT, Francis (1586–1616).
On the Tombs in Westminster Abbey 90
BLAKE, William (1757–1827).
Love's Secret 174
Infant joy 180
A Cradle Song 181
To the Muses 208
BURNS, Robert (1759–1796).
Lament for Culloden 161
A Farewell 168
Ye banks and braes o' bonnie Doon 176
To a mouse 184
Mary Morison 188
Bonnie Lesley 189
O my Luve's like a red, red rose 190
Highland Mary 191
Duncan Gray 193
Jean 196
John Anderson 197
BYRON, George Gordon Noel (1788–1824).
All for Love 212
There be none of Beauty's daughters 214
She walks in beauty, like the night 216
When we two parted 234

NUMBER

Byron, Elegy on Thyrza 246
On the Castle of Chillon 253
Youth and Age 266
Elegy 275

Campbell, Thomas (1777–1844).
Lord Ullin's Daughter 225
To the Evening Star 231
Earl March look'd on his dying child 241
Ye Mariners of England 250
Battle of the Baltic 251
Hohenlinden 259
The Beech Tree's Petition 295
Ode to Winter 304
Song to the Evening Star 310
The Soldier's Dream 314
The River of Life 332
Campion, Thomas (c. 1567–1620).
Basia 25
Advice to a Girl 26
In Imagine Per Transit Homo 50
Sleep, angry beauty, sleep 52
A Renunciation 55
O Crudelis Amor 59
Sic Transit 76
The man of life upright 79
A Hymn in Praise of Neptune 101
Fortunati Nimium 143
Carew, Thomas (1589–1639).
The True Beauty 112
Carey, Henry (——1743).
Sally in our Alley 167
Cibber, Colley (1671–1757).
The Blind Boy 155
Coleridge, Hartley (1796–1849).
She is not fair to outward view 218
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772–1834).
Love (Genevieve) 211
Kubla Khan 316
Youth and Age 329
Collins, John (18th century).
Tomorrow 206

NUMBER

COLLINS, William (1720–1756).
Ode to Simplicity 153
Ode written in 1746 160
The Passions 178
Ode to Evening 186
COWLEY, Abraham (1618–1667).
A Supplication 130
On the Death of Mr. William Hervey 137
COWPER, William (1731–1800).
Loss of the Royal George 165
To a Young Lady 170
The Poplar Field 183
The Shrubbery 200
The Solitude of Alexander Selkirk 202
To Mary Unwin 203
To the Same 204
The Castaway 205
CRASHAW, Richard (1615?–1652).
Wishes for the Supposed Mistress 103
CUNNINGHAM, Allen (1784–1842).
A wet sheet and a flowing sea 249

DANIEL, Samuel (1562–1619).
Care-Charmer Sleep 46
DEKKER, Thomas (——1638?).
The Happy Heart 75
DEVEREUX, Robert (Earl of Essex) (1567–1601).
A Wish 83
DONNE, John (1573–1631).
Present in Absence 12
DRAYTON, Michael (1563–1631).
Love's Farewell 49
DRUMMOND, William (1585–1649).
Summons to Love 4
A Lament 61
To his Lute 63
This Life, which seems so fair 77
The Lessons of Nature 80
Doth then the world go thus? 81
Saint John Baptist 84
DRYDEN, John (1631–1700).
Song for St. Cecilia's Day, 1687 86

NUMBER

DRYDEN, Alexander's Feast 151

ELLIOTT, Jane (18th century).
The Flowers of the Forest (Flodden) 162

FLETCHER, John (1576–1625).
Melancholy 132

GAY, John (1685–1732).
Black-eyed Susan 166
GOLDSMITH, Oliver (1728–1774).
When lovely woman stoops to folly 175
GRAHAM, Robert (1735–1797).
If doughty deeds my lady please 169
GRAY, Thomas (1716–1771).
Ode on the Pleasure arising from Vicissitude 152
On a Favourite Cat 156
The Bard 159
The Progress of Poesy 177
Ode on the Spring 182
Elegy written in a Country Churchyard 187
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College 199
Hymn to Adversity 201
GREENE, Robert (1561?–1592).
Sephestia's Song to her Child 60

HABINGTON, William (1605–1645).
Nox Nocti Indicat Scientiam 148
HERBERT, George (1593–1632).
The Gifts of God 97
HERRICK, Robert (1591–1674?).
Counsel to Girls 108
To Dianeme 113
Corinna's Maying 118
The Poetry of Dress, I 119
" " " " II 120
To Anthea 124
To Blossoms 139
To Daffodils 140
HEYWOOD, Thomas (——1649?).
Give my Love good-morrow 73

NUMBER

HOOD, Thomas (1798–1845).
Past and Present 268
The Bridge of Sighs 274
The Death Bed 279

JONSON, Ben (1574–1637).
The Noble Nature 96
Hymn to Diana 102
To Celia 116

KEATS, John (1795–1821).
Ode on the Poets 209
On first looking into Chapman's Homer 210
Happy Insensibility 235
La Belle Dame sans Merci 237
Bright Star! 242
The Terror of Death 243
The Mermaid Tavern 272
Ode to a Nightingale 290
To one who has been long in city pent 292
Ode to Autumn 303
The Realm of Fancy 318
Ode on a Grecian Urn 328
The Human Seasons 333

LAMB, Mary (1764–1847).
In Memoriam 283
LAMB, Charles (1775–1835).
The Old Familiar Faces 264
Hester 276
On an Infant dying as soon as born 282
LINDSAY, Anne (1750–1825).
Auld Robin Gray 192
LODGE, Thomas (1556–1625).
Rosaline 19
Rosalynd's Madrigal 71
LOGAN, John (1748–1788).
The Braes of Yarrow 163
LOVELACE, Richard (1618–1658).
To Lucasta, on going to the Wars 109
To Althea from Prison 127
To Lucasta, going beyond the Seas 128

NUMBER

LYLYE, John (1554–1600).
Cupid and Campaspe 72
LYTE, Henry Francis (1793–1847).
A Lost Love 224
Agnes 280

MARLOWE, Christopher (1562–1593).
The Passionate Shepherd to his Love 7
MARVELL, Andrew (1620–1678).
Horatian Ode, upon Cromwell's return from Ireland . . 88
The Picture of Little T. C. 105
The Girl describes her Fawn 141
Thoughts in a Garden 142
Song of the Emigrants in Bermuda 146
MICKLE, William Julius (1734–1788).
The Sailor's Wife 194
MILTON, John (1608–1674).
Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity 85
On the late Massacre in Piedmont 87
Lycidas 89
When the Assault was intended to the City 93
On his Blindness 94
To Mr. Lawrence 99
To Cyriack Skinner 100
To the Lady Margaret Ley 111
L'Allegro 144
Il Penseroso 145
At a Solemn Music 147
MOORE, Thomas (1780–1852).
Echoes 229
At the mid hour of night 245
Pro Patria Mori 261
The Journey Onwards 265
The Light of other Days 269

NAIRN, Carolina (1766–1845).
The Land o' the Leal 198
NASH, Thomas (1567–1601?).
Spring 1
NORRIS, John (1657–1711).
Hymn to Darkness 149

NUMBER

PHILIPS, Ambrose (1671–1749).
To Charlotte Pulteney 157
POPE, Alexander (1688–1744).
Solitude 154
PRIOR, Matthew (1662–1721).
The merchant, to secure his treasure 173

QUARLES, Francis (1592–1644).
A Mystical Ecstasy 123

ROGERS, Samuel (1762–1855).
The Sleeping Beauty 171
A Wish 185

SCOTT, Walter (1771–1832).
The Outlaw 213
Jock o' Hazeldean 227
A Serenade 230
Where shall the Lover rest? 236
The Rover 238
The Maid of Neidpath 240
Gathering Song of Donald the Black 248
The Pride of Youth 273
Coronach 278
Rosabelle 281
Hunting Song 285
Datur Hora Quieti 311
SEDLEY, Charles (1639–1701).
Child and Maiden 106
Not, Celia, that I juster am 126
SHAKESPEARE, William (1564–1616).
The Fairy Life, I 2
" " " II 3
Sonnet-Time and Love, I 5
" " " " II 6
A Madrigal 9
Under the greenwood tree 10
It was a lover and his lass 11
Sonnet—Absence 14
" " 15
" A Consolation 16
" The Unchangeable 17

NUMBER

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnet 18
" To his Love 23
" " " " 24
Love's Perjuries 27
Sonnet—True Love 31
Carpe Diem 35
Winter 37
Sonnet—That time of year 38
" Memory 39
" Revolutions 41
" Farewell! 42
" The Life without Passion 43
Frustra—Take, O take those lips away 48
Sonnet—Blind Love 51
Blow, blow, thou winter wind 56
Dirge of Love 62
Fidele—Fear no more the heat 64
A Sea Dirge 65
Sonnet—Post Mortem 67
" The Triumph of Death 68
Young Love 69
Sonnet—Soul and Body 78
" The World's Way 82
SHELLEY, Percy Bysshe (1792–1822).
The Indian Serenade 215
I fear thy kisses, gentle maiden 219
Love's Philosophy 228
To the Night 232
The Flight of Love 239
One word is too often profaned 247
Stanzas written in Dejection near Naples 270
To a Skylark 287
Ozymandias of Egypt 293
To a Lady, with a Guitar 300
The Invitation 307
The Recollection 308
To the Moon 312
A Dream of the Unknown 315
Written among the Euganean Hills 321
Ode to the West Wind 322
The Poet's Dream 324
A Dirge 334

NUMBER

SHELLEY, Threnos 335
Music, when soft voices die 339
SHIRLEY, James (1596–1666).
The Last Conqueror 91
Death the Leveller 92
SIDNEY, Philip (1554–1586).
Via Amoris 13
A Ditty 32
Sleep 40
The Nightingale 47
The Moon 58
SMART, Christopher (1722–1770).
The Song of David 179
SOUTHEY, Robert (1774–1843).
After Blenheim 260
The Scholar 271
SPENSER, Edmund (1553–1598–9).
Prothalamion 74
SUCKLING, John (1608–9–1641).
Encouragements to a Lover 129
SYLVESTER, Joshua (1563–1618).
Love's Omnipresence 34

THOMSON, James (1700–1748).
Rule Britannia 158
For ever, Fortune, wilt thou prove 172

VAUGHAN, Henry (1621–1695).
The Retreat 98
Friends in Paradise 138
A Vision 150
VERSTEGAN, Richard (c. 1635).
Upon my lap my sovereign sits 134

WALLER, Edmund (1605–1687).
Go, lovely Rose 115
On a Girdle 122
WEBSTER, John (—— 1638 ?).
A Land Dirge 66
WILMOT, John (1647–1680).
Constancy 107
WITHER, George (1588–1667).
The Manly Heart 131

NUMBER

WOLFE, Charles (1791–1823).
The Burial of Sir John Moore 262
To Mary 277
WORDSWORTH, William (1770–1850).
She was a phantom of delight. 217
She dwelt among the untrodden ways 220
I travell'd among unknown men 221
The Education of Nature 222
A slumber did my spirit seal 223
Lucy Gray 226
To a distant Friend 233
Desideria 244
Ode to Duty 252
England and Switzerland, 1802 254
On the extinction of the Venetian Republic 255
London, 1802 256
" " 257
When I have borne in memory 258
Simon Lee 262
A Lesson 267
The Affliction of Margaret 284
To the Skylark 286
The Green Linnet 288
To the Cuckoo 289
Upon Westminster Bridge 291
Composed at Neidpath Castle 294
Admonition to a Traveller 296
To the Highland Girl of Inversneyde 297
The Reaper 298
The Reverie of poor Susan 299
The Daffodils 301
To the Daisy 302
Yarrow Unvisited, 1803 305
Yarrow Visited, 1814 306
By the Sea 309
To Sleep 313
The Inner Vision 317
Written in Early Spring 319
Ruth, or the Influences of Nature 320
Nature and the Poet 323
Glen-Almain, the Narrow Glen 325
The World is too much with us 326

NUMBER

WORDSWORTH, Within King's College Chapel, Cambridge . 327
The Two April Mornings 330
The Fountain 331
The Trossachs 336
My heart leaps up 337
Ode on intimations of Immortality 338
WOOTTON, Henry (1568–1639).
Character of a Happy Life 95
Elizabeth of Bohemia 110
WYAT, Thomas (1503–1542).
A Supplication 28
The Lover's Appeal 44

ANONYMOUS.
Omnia Vincit 8
Colin 20
A Picture 21
A Song for Music 22
In Lacrimas 30
Love's Insight 33
An honest Autolycus 36
The Unfaithful Shepherdess 53
Advice to a Lover 54
A sweet Lullaby 57
A Dilemma 70
The Great Adventurer 104
Love in thy youth, fair Maid 114
Cherry Ripe 117
My Love in her attire 121
Love not me for comely grace 125
Forsaken 133
Fair Helen 135
The Twa Corbies 136
Willie Drowned in Yarrow 164
Absence 195

Longmans' English Classics

Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum and Other Poems.
Edited by Ashley H. Thorndike, Professor of English in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Browning's Select Poems.
Edited by Percival Chubb, Director of English, Ethical Culture Schools, New York. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.
Edited by Charles Sears Baldwin, Professor of Rhetoric in Yale University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America.
Edited by Albert S. Cook, Professor of the English Language and Literature in Yale University. $0.25. [For Study.]

Byron's Childe Harold, Canto IV, and Prisoner of Chillon.
Edited by H. E. Coblentz, Principal of The South Division High School, Milwaukee, Wis. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Carlyle's Essay on Burns.
Edited by Wilson Farrand, Principal of the Newark Academy, Newark, N. J., $0.25. [For Study.]

Carlyle's Heroes, Hero-Worship, and the Heroic in History.
Edited by Henry David Gray, Instructor in English in Leland Stanford, Jr. University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Coleridge's The Rime of the Ancient Mariner.
Edited by Herbert Bates, Brooklyn Manual Training High School, New York. $0.25. [For Reading.]

DeQuincey's Joan of Arc and The English Mail Coach.
Edited by Charles Sears Baldwin, Professor of Rhetoric in Yale University. $0.25. [For Reading, 1910 to 1912.]

Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities.
Edited by Frederick William Roe, Assistant Professor of English, Univ. of Wisconsin. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Franklin's Autobiography.
Edited by William B. Cairns, Assistant Professor of American Literature in the University of Wisconsin. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Gaskell's Cranford.
Edited by Franklin T. Baker, Professor of the English Language and Literature in Teachers College, Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

George Eliot's Silas Marner.
Edited by Robert Herrick, Professor of Rhetoric in the University of Chicago. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield.
Edited by Mary A. Jordan, Professor of Rhetoric and Old English in Smith College. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Gray's Elegy In A Country Churchyard and Goldsmith's The Deserted Village.
Edited by James F. Hosic, Head of the Department of English in the Chicago Normal School, Chicago, Ill. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Huxley's Autobiography and Selections From Lay Sermons.
Edited by E. H. Kemper McComb, Head of the Department of English in the Manual Training High School, Indianapolis, Ind. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Irving's Sketch Book.
With an Introduction by Brander Matthews, Professor of Dramatic Literature, Columbia University, and with notes by Armour Caldwell, A.B. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Lincoln, Selections From.
Edited by Daniel K. Dodge, Professor of English in the University of Illinois. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal, and Other Poems.
Edited by Allan Abbott, Head of the Department of English, Horace Mann High School, Teachers College, New York City. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Macaulay's Essay on Lord Clive.
Edited by Preston C. Farrar, Instructor of English in Erasmus Hall High School, Brooklyn, N. Y. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome, with Ivry and The Armada.
Edited by Nott Flint, late Instructor in English in the University of Chicago. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Macaulay's Life of Samuel Johnson.
Edited by Huber Gray Buehler, Head-master Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn. $0.25. [For Study.]

Macaulay's Warren Hastings.
Edited by Samuel M. Tucker, Professor of English and Dean in The Florida State College. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Milton's L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Comus and Lycidas.
Edited by William P. Trent, Professor of English Literature in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Study; after 1911, "Lycidas" is omitted.]

Parkman's The Oregon Trail.
Edited by Ottis B. Sperlin, Head of the Department of English in the Tacoma High School, Washington. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Palgrave's The Golden Treasury.
Edited by Herbert Bates, of the Manual Training High School, Brooklyn, New York City. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies.
Edited by Gertrude Buck, Associate Professor of English in Vassar College. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Scott's Ivanhoe.
Edited by Bliss Perry, Professor of English Literature in Harvard University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Scott's Lady of the Lake.
Edited by George Rice Carpenter, late Professor of Rhetoric and English Composition in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Scott's Quentin Durward.
Edited by Mary E. Adams, Head of the Department of English in the Central High School, Cleveland, O. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's A Midsummer Night's Dream.
Edited by George Pierce Baker, Professor of English in Harvard University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's As You Like It.
With an Introduction by Barrett Wendell, A.B., Professor of English in Harvard University; and Notes by William Lyon Phelps, Lampson Professor of English Literaure in Yale University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's Macbeth.
Edited by John Matthews Manly, Professor and Head of the Department of English in the University of Chicago. $0.25. [For Study.]

Shakspere's Julius Caesar.
Edited by George C. D. Odell, Professor of English in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's King Henry V.
Edited by George C. D. Odell, Professor of English in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's The Merchant of Venice.
Edited by Francis B. Gummere, Professor of English in Haverford College. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Shakspere's Twelfth Night.
Edited by John B. Henneman, Ph.D., late Professor of English in the University of the South. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Spenser's The Faerie Queene. (Selections.)
Edited by John Erskine, Professor of English in Amherst College. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Stevenson's Treasure Island.
Edited by Clayton Hamilton, Extension Lecturer in English, Columbia University $0.25. [For Reading.]

Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, Lancelot and Elaine, The Passing of Arthur.
Edited by Sophie C. Hart, Associate Professor of Rhetoric in Wellesley College. $0.25. [For Reading, 1909 to 1915. For Study, 1912.]

Tennyson's The Princess.
Edited by George Edward Woodberry, formerly Professor of Comparative Literature in Columbia University. $0.25. [For Reading, 1912.]

The Sir Roger de Coverley Papers.
Edited by D. O. S. Lowell, Head-master of the Roxbury Latin School, Boston, Mass. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Thoreau's Walden.
Edited by Raymond M. Alden, Professor of English in Leland Stanford Junior University, California. $0.25. [For Reading.]

Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration and Washington's Farewell Address.
Edited by Fred Newton Scott, Professor of Rhetoric in the University of Michigan. $0.25. [For Study.]

Cooper's The Last of the Mohicans.
Edited by Charles F. Richardson, Professor of English in Dartmouth College. $0.50.

Defoe's History of the Plague in London.
Edited by George R. Carpenter, late Professor of Rhetoric and English Composition in Columbia University. $0.60.

De Quincey's Flight of a Tartar Tribe.
Edited by Charles Sears Baldwin, Professor of Rhetoric in Yale University. $0.40.

Dryden's Palamon and Arcite.
Edited by William Tenney Brewster, Professor of English in Columbia University. $0.40.

Irving's Life of Goldsmith.
Edited by Lewis B. Semple, Instructor in English, Brooklyn Commercial High School, New York. $0.25.

Irving's Tales of a Traveller.
With an Introduction by Brander Matthews, Professor of Dramatic Literature in Columbia University, and Explanatory Notes by Professor George R. Carpenter. $0.80.

Macaulay's Essay on Milton.
Edited by James Greenleaf Croswell, Head-master of the Brearley School, New York. $0.40.

Macaulay's Essays on Milton and Addison.
Edited by James Greenleaf Croswell, Head-master of the Brearley School, New York. $0.40.

Macaulay's Johnson and Addison.
1. Life of Samuel Johnson, edited by Huber Gray Buehler, Hotchkiss School.
2. Addison, edited by James Greenleaf Croswell, Brearley School. $0.40.

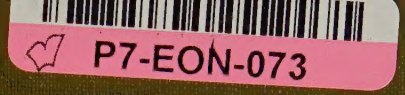
Milton's Paradise Lost. Books I. and II.
Edited by Edward Everett Hale, Jr., Professor of the English Language and Literature in Union College. $0.40.

Pope's Homer's Iliad. Books I., VI., XXII. and XXIV.
Edited by William H. Maxwell, Superintendent of New York City Schools; and Percival Chubb, Director of English in the Ethical Culture Schools, New York. $0.40.

Scott's Marmion.
Edited by Robert Morss Lovett, Professor of English in the University of Chicago. $0.60.

Scott's Woodstock.
Edited by Bliss Perry, Professor of English Literature in Harvard University. $0.60.

Southey's Life of Nelson.
Edited by Edwin L. Miller, Head of the English Department, Central High School, Detroit, Mich. $0.60.



P7-EON-073